We have been struck, at times, by a curious lack of balance in the way we go at things and in selecting the things which we do go at, contrasted with other universities. When the football season arrives there is scarcely an institution anywhere more keenly interested in the sport. When the intermittent sleet, snow and rain of a North Carolina winter disappear finally and the ball tossers are here, there and everywhere, we know only the all-absorbing game of baseball. The forensically inclined in the proper season take quite an animated interest in debate. In fact, there are few institutions which excel us in the attention paid to this branch of our training.

But take these three: football, baseball and debate and you have the things and all the things in which the University in a large way is interested. Basket ball? We made a feverish and fitful attempt to get up a basket ball team last year and the year before but apparently it has gone glimmering this year. Tennis? We have a tennis association which has sent out a number of tennis teams, but how many would feel great enough concern to attend an intercollegiate meet held upon our own grounds? Track work? We have put out a team every year for several successive years, but have never aroused interest enough to put out a winning team. Orchestra and glee clubs? Quite a deal of interest is being taken and there are excellent prospects for a creditable aggregation, yet when have they ever played or sung to a packed house on the Hill? And at our sister institution, the University of Virginia, the first night of practice brought out double the number of candidates that turned out here.

We could continue the enumeration indefinitely, but the examples given are sufficient to illustrate our point that we are, in some respects, a one-sided aggregation of folks. It is not thus at other places. We published last week a list of the championships in college sports. Many of the games on this list were calculated to cause the average Carolinian to scratch his head disconsolately if he were asked their nature. We confess we have not analysed the cause of this state of affairs to our own satisfaction. We have merely observed the defect and direct attention to it.

How about a baseball game for Monday afternoon of Commencement week? If the Varsity could keep in pretty good practice during examinations a game might be secured with some neighboring college team. Georgetown, it will be recalled, played Virginia at Charlottesville on a similar occasion last summer as late as June 15. Such a game would be a tremendous drawing card.

If this proves impracticable, however, there remain various other ways to get up a game. The faculty (who had a red hot team at last accounts) might play the students or the students might play the alumni or two teams could be picked from out the Varsity and the scrubs for a match game. Something should be done to fill up that boresome vacant day.

A system which separates the editorial and business departments is sometimes productive of some slight confusion, but here is a case where an oversight on the part of someone was productive of a piece of satiric literature too good to be passed unnoticed. We do not believe the author will object to our reproducing it here. It comes from a sparkling contemporary in Washington, D. C.

Editor of THE TAR HEEL,
Sir:

If you will not exchange with us even, how would it do for you to send your paper and let us pay you the difference between the intrinsic value of yours and that of ours? A committee could estimate it.

Yours truly,

An editorial in a recent issue of the Magazine dropped a tear for the passing of the old and simple regime of University life, substituted now by a complex life split up into manifold divisions. A glance at the Bulletin for this week illustrates this point. Not all the skill and careful foresight of the date-makers could prevent conflicts between the various attractions. But such is life at a great University and we who have been ambitious to have this a great one should have no kick coming if our wish is granted.

Lo! the voice of the debater in the society halls. The season is upon us. Come forth, therefore, ye theorizers on governmental functions, ye expounders of the law of relativity, the law of progress, the law of growth, the law of harmony, —the law of Boyle, the law of Gresham, the law of diminishing returns—come forth and show the spirit that is in you.

The News and Observer suggests that the young men who invent the wild and woolly names for the college annuals would be valuable assistants to Miss Pullman in naming the Pullman cars. They could deliver the goods all right, but it would take a bigger job than that to keep them busy. It would be the merest pastime.
