Although the University Council has been invested with the authority necessary for the eradication of hazing it will be powerless unless backed by the honor of the student body. The honor system has, in the past, given the University a national reputation, but we may at present ask ourselves with good reason: Is the honor system in force here now? The mutilation of the property of the library and the shielding of hazers call the integrity of the examination room in serious question. The success of the University Council in its efforts to convict hazers will determine the state of affairs definitely.

Men will be called before the Council who know the authors of the turmoil which has disturbed the University this fall. If they shield the criminals and abet this hundredth per cent of the student body in defaming the University simply through fear of public opinion, when they know their duty, they are guilty of a moral cowardice worse even than the low physical cowardice of those who, with masks on their faces, break into the room of a fellow student after nightfall to heap indignities on him which they would not dare to offer him in open day. No excuse that they can offer can stand them in stead. The assertion that they are backed by some of the "best men in college" in keeping silent is untrue. The men who back them lose all of their claim to college prestige by that action alone. Some such men may exist in the upper classes, to the shame of those classes be it said, but it is hard for us to believe that any man who has spent from three to four years on this campus does not feel too much love for his Alma Mater to connive with the recreants who defile her name, or does not experience a just indignation when he sees such men as make up the hazing crowds as representatives—for so the State considers them—heap disgrace upon the University.

The life of the honor system is in the hands of the men who go before the student council. If these men refuse to tell what they know, if they persist in protecting this scum of the student body so dangerous to the health of the college, then is the honor system at the University a pitiable sham to which we had better discard all claim and sail under our true colors as advocates of hazing.

OPPORTUNITY will soon be afforded to every student at the University to witness the presentation of a Morality play as presented prior to the time of Queen Elizabeth. The play, "Everyman," which is allegorical in nature and dates from the fifteenth century, will be presented by the Ben Greet Company of London players, in Durham on November 16th, just as it has been given by them 100 times on the London stage, and in the theatres of the principal cities of England and America.

Mr. Greet presents the play as nearly as possible in the same manner as it was presented in the fifteenth century, his object being purely educational. "Everyman," as he presents it, portrays the chrysalis from which has grown the drama of to-day. As such it must be of special interest and value to every student of dramatic literature. However no student at the University, whether he be interested in the study of literature or not, can afford to allow this educational opportunity to pass him by. That the greater educational institutions of the world recognize the value of Mr. Greet's presentation of "Everyman" in this respect is proved by the fact that he has given it repeatedly under the auspices of University College, Oxford, England, and also under the auspices of the Universities of Harvard, Yale, Pennsylvania and Michigan.

WHILE Mr. Greet's company presents only the Morality play "Everyman" on its Southern tour it is also noted for its presentations of Shakespeare's plays, not with the elaborate stage-settings of to-day, but in the simple manner in which they were given during the lifetime of their author. In its presentations of these plays in the open air, and especially in that of "As You Like It," is the company said to excel most. These out-of-door presentations were given last spring at Belmont College, Nashville; the University of the South, Sewanee; Converse College, Spartanburg; and the University of Virginia. Now why should arrangement not be made for their presentation here next spring? Nowhere could a spot be found more fitting for these open air performances than our campus. It is the ideal setting for them. For the guarantee of the small sum of $400 Mr. Greet will bring his company to Chapel Hill, provided he makes a Southern tour. If every man in college would subscribe a dollar the sum would be more than sufficient. Besides this the presentations would undoubtedly receive patronage from Durham, Greensboro and Raleigh. Why not make an effort to get the Ben Greet company here?

Juniors Victorious.

The Juniors defeated the Seniors in a hard-fought contest on the gridiron last Saturday afternoon. The game was a good one from start to finish, the teams being about evenly matched, and each playing the game for all that there was in it. Although the final score stood 5 to 0 in favor of the Juniors they could hardly have been said to have outplayed their opponents.

The Juniors' goal was threatened several times while the Seniors kept their opponents well away from their goal line, with a single exception of the time when '08 scored.

Early in the first half it looked very much as if '07 would go over the Juniors for a touchdown but '08 secured the ball and carried it out of danger. Soon after this Fountain, for the Juniors, on a quarterback run got away from the bunch, dodged Tillett and ran forty yards for a touchdown, at which the '08 rooters very properly went crazy. Fountain failed to kick goal, and the scoring was over. Although the Seniors again threatened the Juniors' goal in the first half and once in the second they failed to make the necessary gains each time.

For the Juniors, Fountain and Britt played good ball. McLean did star work for the Seniors, as he did in the Fresh-Senior game, and Tillett won the applause of the rooters by sticking to the game although hurt early in the first half.

The line-up was as follows:

Juniors		Seniors
Raney	i.e.	Pemberton
Fore, Muse	r.t.	Spruill
Britt	l.g.	Rankin, Houck
