The Coming of the Bears.

Signors Don Carlos, Don Ruy Gomez, and Hernani, with two star-performing bears, Jo and John, were the center of attraction on the campus Saturday afternoon. As the clarion notes of Don Ruy Gomez's horn rang out on the profound calm of the spicy spring afternoon, the students and the village small boys came, two hundred strong.

Don Carlos, acting in a manner entirely unbecoming to his dignity, shelled off his travel-battered hat and announced that for $20. the bears would do some stunts and that for one dollar more Hernani and Jo would engage in a wrestling match. The coins fell not fast enough for Don Carlos' taste, and he enquired in a plaintive voice, "Where is dat Vic-Collier's man? He will gif me someting."

When the purse had been made up, the bears waltzed, and played the soldier and the rough-rider. Then Hernani removed his hat, and the wrestling contest was on. Long they struggled, clinging to each other lovingly, the man breathing strange foreign oaths, the bear indulging in numerous grunts. Exciting it was — the latter part of the V. P. I. game was not in it. The brute strength of Jo, however, was too much for Hernani, who was thrown; but not conquered. Again they clinched, again Hernani fell. Twice more they struggled, and at last Hernani retired crestfallen.

Then quoth Don Carlos, "For feefy cents John will climb-a de tree."

The lucre came, and John, gracefully as only a bear can, ascended and decended one of the giant oaks. The crowd was bled; the performance ended, and the performers, with a flourish of trumpets, departed in great pomp, accompanied by sundry small boys.
