VILLANOVA TAKES ONE GAME.

three men, but Nichols the next batter, relieved the situation immensely by striking out. He however made up for his dim lamps at the bat by putting up in the field the best game at short seen here this year. He robbed Stewart of a hit by making an almost impossible catch of his line drive to left and the way he ambled about short field and caught runners napping off second base will not be forgotten here soon.

Cole hit well and run bases in good fashion in both games. Coach Stocksdale switched Montgomery and Fountain in the latter part of the first game and in the second and the change seemed to work well. Though Montgomery is handicapped at short on account of his southpaw disposition, still the change looks good and it is to be hoped that the same line up will continue.

To the Southern, on Missing the Virginia Game.

At three and thirty the game it began,
At one and twenty my train became due.
To get there I'd carefully plan'd,
'Gainst Virginia it was my rue.
But the will of man is but flitting,
When railroads come into the play;
In the station forlorn I was sitting
The full quarter's part of a day.
The Southern it was I had trusted,
Oh, railroad indeed but in name,
All faith in you sure is busted
Since I missed the Virginia game!
For the train that was scheduled one-twenty,
Got there at four forty-two!

Baseball Hits.

Hackney will get his three-bagger ever and anon.

Fully, as usual, delivered the goods against Dartmouth.

The Villanova bunch can sure play ball. And bat? Well, yes. Reddy had Villanova guessing. And Sullivan had Carolina guessing.

Carolina's outfielders can't be beat anywhere. Remember that low drive that King Cole scooped in?

Browning, of Somewhere, was at the first Dartmouth game and he was happy, for he had put his mon. on Carolina.
