UNIVERSITY DAY CELEBRATED

He said: "In view of the fact that we have completed in time for the opening of this session, Davie Hall, the new biological laboratory, I have thought it well to give some brief account of the one for whom it has been named.

"William Richardson Davie, known as the Father of the University, was a graduate of Princeton and rendered distinguished service in the Revolutionary War, attaining the rank of Colonel. After the war he entered upon the practice of law and became a man of commanding influence in the councils of this state.

"The charter of the University was granted December 11th, 1789, one month after the State of North Carolina had entered the American Union. This was due to the earnest efforts of Davie, who planned wisely for the development of his people. As one of the trustees he assisted in selecting the location for the University, in raising funds for the erection of its buildings and in choosing its faculty, taking a most prominent part in all of these matters. He drew up the prospectus or plan of studies for the University which was followed for many years. Its success was his most cherished ambition and he cheerfully devoted his time, energy and means to the advancement of its interests.

"He was the leading member of the building committee of the trustees. This committee met on August 10th at Chapel Hill to mark off, out of the land given to the University, sites for builds, offices, avenues and ornamental grounds. Tradition has it that they met under what is now known as Davie Poplar. There was no village here then, only farming lands. Lots were sold and a eillage laid off. On October 1n, 1793, the corner stone of the Old East Building, the first of the University buildings, was laid. Colonel Davie, or General Davie as he was called, for he was made Brigadier-General by Washington, officiated as Grand Master of the Masonic Order.

"On that first University Day, one hundred and fifteen years ago, the procession of Masons, Trustees, state officers, donors of the land, neighboring landholders and visitors marched along the narrow roadway now known as Cameron Avenue and gathered about the spot which the Old East Building now covers. Dr. Samuel E. McCorkle, preacher and teacher, a devoted friend of the University, delivered the address before the distinguished audience of the chief men of the state, Senators, Governors, Judges of the Supreme Court, and others. It was a masterly address and a full report of it has been preserved.

"The corner stone was laid by Davie with fitting Masonic ceremonies. Judge Archibald Murphy, in a speech before the two literary societies in 1827 described him as follows: 'Davie was a tall, elegant man in his person, graceful and commanding in his manners. His voice was mellow and adapted to the expression of every passion, his mind comprehensive yet slow in its operation, when compared with his great rival Moore; his style was magnificent and flowing; he had a greatness of manner in public speaking which suited his style, and gave to his speeches an imposing effect. He was a laborious student, arranged his discourses with care, and where the subject merited his genius, poured forth a torrent of eloquence that astonished and enraptured his audience.'

"Davie laid also the corner stone of the South Building in 1798. In that year he became Governor of North Carolina. He was appointed Special Commissioner to France.

"After the death of his wife he moved to South Carolina, spending the remainder of his life at Tivoli, near the line of Mecklenburg County and lies buried there.

"It is eminently fitting that the memory of this man should be perpetuated among us and that one of the buildings of the University should stand as a memorial to him."

Dr. C. Alphonso Smith read the names of the Alumni who had died during the year. These names make up a long list and included some of the most distinguished men of the state. Dr. W.H. Meade closed the exercises with benediction.

In the afternoon there were a hotly contested football game between the Juniors and Sophomores, and the preliminary contest for the Carolina-Pennsylvania debate.

The social event of the day was a reception given by the president at his home to the faculty, alumni and visitors. The reception was a pleasant close of a most pleasant day.

A Macon County Club was organized Tuesday night. The following officers were elected: President, G. C. Mann; vice-president, H. H. Jarrett, Jr.; Sec. and Treas. Paul Jones.
