THE CAROLINA-VIRGINIA GAME

WILL BE PLAYED NEXT THURSDAY IN RICHMOND

Five Hundred Students Going --- Five Excursions
From North Carolina. Song Practice
Tonight --- A Game Tomorrow
Afternoon

One week from today there will arrive in the Old Dominion capital from the Old North State five excursion trains teeming with thousands of loyal Tar Heels eager to see the great Carolina-Virginia gridiron battle. Not the least of these excursions is a students' special which will leave Chapel Hill Wednesday night at 12 o'clock with five hundred students keyed to the highest pitch of enthusiasm and fired with a spirit of determination to back their Varsity at all times and under all circumstances.

The students' special will consist of eight day coaches and several Pullman cars. The round-trip fare is three dollars and the cost of a berth, two dollars. The train will arrive in Richmond at eight o'clock Thursday morning and the students will have a plenty of time to see many places of historic interest in old Richmond town. Most of the students will get lunch at the restaurants and some of the flushed will dine at the far famed Jefferson, which will be the headquarters of the Carolina team. At one thirty all the Carolina students will assemble at the Jefferson and headed by the University Band will march en masse to Broad Street Park eight blocks off. They will all take seats together.

Seated there in full view of a vast assembly of spectators, the 500 Tar Heel students will welcome the Varsity as comes on the field by standing and bared heads singing that grand old song: "Hail to U. N. C.". From the moment that the Varsity comes on the field till time is called these 500 students, systematically, lead by several cheer leaders, will shake the arena with their "Yackety Yacks" and "Boom Rah Rays."

In order to gain more system and efficiency in rooting and singing, meetings will be held tonight and tomorrow night in the Chapel from 7:15 to 7:45 to practice all the yells and songs, new and old. Every student in University should be present at these song and yell practices. Carolina has always been strong in cheering but her strength has often been wasted by lack of system. Come out to these meetings and help to develop an organized system of yelling that will make for the greatest efficiency.

Friday afternoon there will be a preliminary Carolina-Virginia game on local gridiron. This game will have all the marks of a regular game. Field Captain Rogers will direct the Varsity forces and Captain Eames will lead the Scrubs. The University Band and the visiting young ladies will be present to make the occasion more realistic. The game will be called promptly at 4:30. Two halves of fifteen minutes each will be played with an intermission of five minutes. Coach Simmons will be referee and A. L. Cox will umpire. The entire student body will be present to witness this, the most important practice of the season.

At the last practice Tuesday afternoon all the wearers of the N. C. in the University will assemble on the field en masse to sing and cheer for their comrades in harness. Tuesday night, as the bonfire flashes the signal in the heavens, the Tar Heel forces will assemble in Gerrard Hall to have the big final mass meeting of the year (excepting, of course, the mass meeting after the game.) It goes without saying that every student in the University will be present at this meeting. Such a meeting as will be held Tuesday night is not held but once in every college generation. The band will be there; the prince of mass meeting speakers will be there; Coach Greene, Manager Gray, Captain Thomas, Field Captain Rogers and his determined eleven will be there; in fact we will all be there.

THROUGHOUT North Carolina and Virginia there is much speculation as to the outcome of the Thanksgiving game. The odds are on Virginia.

THREE VICTORIES LAST WEEK

CAROLINA WINS IN DEBATE, FOOTBALL AND TENNIS

Umstead and Battle Win From Pennsylvania.
Varsity Defeats South Carolina. Fountain and Hyman Blank
Davidson

The University of North Carolina defeated the University of Pennsylvania Friday night in the second debate between the two universities. The query was: Resolved. That the pooling of interstate rates and traffic should be legalized." Messrs. C. A. Drefs, Jr., and Perrot of the Philomathean Society upheld the affirmative. Mr. John W. Umstead, Jr., and Mr. Kemp D. Battle, of the Philanthropic and Dialec-and third, that there must be some form of co-operation.

Mr. Umstead opened for the negative. He maintained that railroad evils are due either to wrong relationship between the different roads and between the roads and the people. Pooling fails to change either of these and thus fails as a solution. In practice, pooling fails since it does not eliminate present evils, does not make for general uniformity, and is only a temporary measure. It is thus an artificial solution imposed on the railroads and not growing out of the nature of the railroads.

Mr. Perrot followed for the affirmative. He said that there were several requisites in the railroad world. Among the most important are: stability, uniformity, and co-operation. There must be stability to insure justice to the roads. There must be uniformity to insure government regulation. They co-operate and must co-operate if they are to work well. This co-operation should be legalized in the form of pooling.

Mr. Battle closed the debate. He said in substance: Our country demands good transportation. The best transportation can be obtained through combination. Combination eliminates competition, and is thoroughly in keeping with the nature of the railroads. Pooling and combination are incompatible. Pooling removes the incentive to combination, for only in the absence of pooling has there been any actual combination. Therefore pooling should be kept under the ban of the law.

J. W. UMSTEAD

tic Societies represented Carolina and defended the negative.

The debate was held in Price Hall. Dr. Lingelback, professor of history, presided. The judges were, Professor James H. Moffat, Francis Rowle, Esq., and W. F. Gleason, Esq. The debate was spirited and well fought on both sides, but the North Carolinians took the Pennsylvanians by surprise attack and so completely swept them off their feet that they were unable to rally. The Quakers expected the Tar Heels to argue for competition or government ownership. Battle and Umstead, however, went deep down into the nature of railroads and showed that the trend of railroad evolution was inevitably toward combination, and that pooling was a makeshift for combination. Their deep laid, organic argument was simply irrefutable, and the judges voted unanimously in favor of Carolina.

Mr. Drefs opened for the affirmative and laid down three propositions: first, that, in railroading, competition is detrimental; second, that virtual pooling exists today in the form of agreements and combination by community of interests;

'Varsity Defeats South Carolina

Saturday afternoon in a cold, driving rain and on a field of mud and slush North Carolina triumphed over South Carolina by the score of 22 to 0 in the last game before the great Thanksgiving melee. As the condition of the field precluded the successful use of the new style play, Carolina relied altogether on straight, old-fashioned line smashing which often degenerated into a sliding match. South Carolina, however, used onside kicks and forward passes to advantage, the slushy condition of the field to the contrary notwithstanding.

In the limelight for the Varsity were Williams, Ruffin, Wiggins, Rogers, Tillet, and Lester. Will-
