A Mid-Autumn's Nightmare

(By A. SIX)

Dramatis Personae.
Doctor—a professor, 40 students and Attendants.

ACT I.

Scene: Botany lecture Room.
Time 1:29 p. m.
(Doctor at blackboard; students at seats in various positions. Both hungry but resigned.)

Doctor: Upon this surface smooth, before me,
Dark from the black'ning brush of some good painter.

I now shall place three questions, short withal and easy to be answered—(bell ringing in distance—visible excitement among students—Doctor smiles with left side of mouth.)

—Whereas the bell Has just now tolled the hour for us to feed,

Of these three questions take the first alone.

First Student: My finish now I see.

Second Student: No pie for mine.

Third Student: (whispering) How much is given for the pledge alone?

All: Well I'll be d—

ACT 2.

Scene: Steps of Davie Hall.

Time: 1:35 p. m.

First Student: What answer did you give to your first question, friend?

Second Student: Algae.

Third Student: Cyanophytes

First Student: And I said Thallophyta.

All: Woe is us, miserable nincompoops.

Doctor (within): This man a six shall get and this a six

And this—alas no further will I look

But unto each of them a six will give

Except to them who have the initial "L"

For luck and unto them I'll give a three,

And they deserve it—Well, so may it be.

ACT 3.

Scene: Botany lecture room.

Time: 12:36 p. m.

(Doctor with quiz papers: Students woe-begone).

Doctor: Gentlemen, who sit now in this room

Hark to me sweetly warble. By these tokens

I have now before me it is known That of you all not one the book hath read

And those that have been sleeping on these lectures

Have dreamed not of the subject of Botany.

1st Student: Alas.

2nd Student: Alack.

3rd Student: Woe.

All Well, I'll be d—
