usited when Dr. Stiles made known his discovery of the existence of the hookworm and stated that a large per cent of the people of the South were infected. Many did not believe it then. A few do not believe it now. However, before Dr. Stiles had made his lectures throughout the country he had lectured at Wake Forest and Dr. Rankin, the dean of the medical department, made an examination of a large number of students and found that about 37 per cent of those examined were infected with the hookworm. This was about four years ago, before the general censure of Dr. Stiles.

About four weeks ago Dr. John Powers, dean of the medical department, and Dr. E. E. Stewart, of the medical faculty, began an examination of the present student body. The students have responded willingly to the investigation and have not been bashful in the least, taking the stand that if they had the hookworm they wanted to get rid of it. Many are examined every day and it is hoped that every student can be examined before commencement. When seen today Dr. Powers refused to give the number who were infected as he had promised several medical journals the number and their recapitulation by counties before he would give it to the press but stated that fifty per cent of those examined had the hookworm disease. Few or none of those who were raised in cities showed the least signs while a large proportion of the students from the counties ranging from Iredell and Davidson to Pasquotank were afflicted.

Most of the students have already taken the treatment prescribed and are now permanently cured, and if there is a man in North Carolina who does not believe in the hookworm he could be firmly convinced by a talk with the students who have taken the treatment at this college.

Horace Geyer, Jr., of Brooklyn, N. Y., has been elected captain of the University of Virginia football team to fill the vacancy made by the resignation of "Ted" Bowen. The new leader of the 1910 Varsity has been a member of the Virginia football team for three years, playing right tackle on the famous '08-'09 team, and was elected at the end of the past season as the best man in his position, playing in South Atlantic Division football.—College Topics.
