THE baseball season has closed. The manager of the team has been on a big drunk for three days! Carolina has played a schedule of twenty-six games and has won seventeen. Among the nine games we have lost there were seven in which we lost by only one run. Looked at all together, the season has been more successful than most college baseball seasons. But considering the fact that only last year we put out the championship team of the South and that early in the season this year baseball dope seemed to promise us such a fine season, the students and probably the team also do not feel elated over the past season. There seems to have been something lacking somewhere which no one can quite locate. Sometimes we lost by not hitting, then again by an unreasonable number of errors. Really the only reason that we feel any disappointment is because we always expect our team to be the most successful in the South. If we consider that ever now and then some other college among all the number will surely put out a better team than ours then we cannot grumble over this year's work. We could boast a little more if we had won certain games but as matters stand we have every right to be proud of our record.

THOSE men who have given the most service to the University of North Carolina this year are beginning to reap their rewards. But there is a larger number who have given service that was not quite so good who go without recognition. These men have given the best there was in them to their alma mater. There have been others who have given more but none have given more of what they had. These men, the "scrubs" of college achievement, are what make the varsity men possible. They are the flint that draws the spark from the steel. Not so bright as the steel but necessary to make the spark. And they deserve some recognition. We do not know whether it is customary to give rewards to the "scrubs" at any other institution, but we know that they deserve something. And since they do, Carolina does not have to seek a precedent. We ought to recognize these men—men who have given ungrudgingly of the best they had only to help another man win for the alma mater. These men lose themselves in their love for the university and the university knows them not.

THE LAST CHAPEL

Chapel was held for the last time this year on Wednesday. Dr. Venable made the talk. He said that he felt the same thrill in facing the students for this final time that he did last fall. Almost nine months the students have journeyed together. Dr. Venable said that he trusted that there would be no letting up, and that in the coming examinations every effort would be made to prove that the time spent here has not been fruitless.

There have been troubles and disappointments, but everyone who has used the opportunities offered has grown in strength and higher ideals. Dr. Venable said that he was proud of this student body,—proud of the straightforward, manly way in which it has met the great problems of the year.

No influence has made it swerve from its ideals. He was proud of the Students' Council, both because of the faithful efforts it has made at the performance of duty, and because of its absolutely non-partisan spirit. The students have grown in the great ideal of self government—that of their own personal responsibility for law and order. As a final word Dr. Venable reminded the students that the students, faculty, and president of this institution must work together for its upbuilding. He asked that the students give some little of their time this summer in seeking men who would be worthy residents of this college community.

"JUST PUBLISHED"

Webster's NEW INTERNATIONAL Dictionary, (G. & C. Merriam Co., Springfield, Mass.) surpasses the old International as much as that book exceeded its predecessor. Editor in Chief, Dr. W. T. Harris, former U. S. Com. of Education. The definitions have been rearranged and amplified. The number of terms defined has been more than doubled. The Etymology, synonyms, pronunciation, have received unsparing scholarly labor. The language of English literature for over seven centuries, the terminology of the arts and sciences, and the every-day speech of street, shop, and household, are presented with fullness and clearness. In size of vocabulary, in richness of general information, and in convenience of consultation, the book sets a new mark in lexicography.

400,000 words and phrases.
