

With Other Colleges.

In a recent issue of College Topics, appears the following:

With the election this week of Charlie Crawford to coach the football team for the next year and "Pop" Geyer to captain the eleven, prospects for success next fall have been greatly boosted, and the fact that Virginia will have a winning team to uphold her claim to pre-eminence in the South now borders upon certainty.

The leading colleges of Virginia hold an annual oratorical contest in which each college participating is represented by one speaker. South Carolina colleges also engage in a contest of this kind. The following notice is taken from the "Ring Tum Phi" of Washington and Lee:

On last Wednesday evening at eight o'clock, in "Wash" Hall, a preliminary contest was held and a representative chosen to represent Washington and Lee in the annual state oratorical contest which is to be held at Emory and Henry College sometime in May. Mr. Heavener with an oration on "The United States, a World Power," won the decision and with the good showing made here should stand a good chance to win out in the final contest. The colleges and universities forming the State Oratorical Association are: Washington and Lee University, Emory and Henry, Randolph-Macon, Richmond, William and Mary, and Roanoke Colleges, and University of Virginia.

In an address before the students of the University of Kansas, April 29, Ambassador James Bryce made a strong plea for the humanistic studies and for habits of sound and exact thinking. This extract is taken from a news report of the address:

It was not only the applied sciences, Mr. Bryce thought, that ought to be provided for, such as agricultural chemistry and engineering, but also the theoretic sciences, such as chemistry and physics and biology. There is an even greater danger today in all countries, in Europe as well as in America, of neglecting the literary or humanistic subjects such as philosophy and history and philology.

Therefore, the ambassador said, he would remind the students that in their college years they had to prepare themselves not only for their special vocation in life, be it commercial or professional, but also for life itself. They must learn to love literature and history; they must learn to think about those great things which had occupied the human mind in the past and were treated of in the works of the most famous men of older days. Let them never be afraid to spend time on studies which seem remote from our times. From the ancient writers of Greece and Rome, from the great poets of later times, such as Dante and Shakespeare and Milton, there was still to be gathered such fruit as does not grow on any trees today.

"Three-fourths of the mistakes that a man makes are made because he doesn't really know the thing he thinks he knows," said the ambassador.

The habit of sound and careful and independent thinking, he went on to say, was the best intellectual quality a young man could start in his journey through life. "That, and the love of truth, are what a university ought to teach."

"LONDON ASSURANCE"

Everybody made good from Sir Harcourt Hartley to Pert. The necessities for promptings were few and far between, and at these times the assistance was given with a dexterity that almost made the pause pass for a scheduled breathing space. At times it became necessary for one or two actors to gaze into the dressing room and to remark interestedly on the gradual approach of some fellow. At such time the said actors kept the conversation spicedly and containedly, always giving the approaching one full time to climb in thru the room window without tearing his train.

The production of "London Assurance" was the fruit of long practice and painstaking coaching, and Mr. Adolph Vermont may well congratulate himself on the success which his company attained.

Above is a list of the prizes to be awarded in the college singles championship tournament. The tournament is being rushed thru at top speed as examinations are near. The rounds are being merged, and every player is urged to meet his opponent at the earliest possible moment.

The names of the winners will appear on the placard in the Athletic Store window as soon they become known.

Despite repeated efforts no one can be secured to keep the courts marked. The marker and a big supply of lime are ever ready in the gym. Players are to be careful in marking. The tournament's third round from the end must be played off by Saturday night. Couples who don't play by then will be dropped, or the one of them dropped who refused to play.
