DEATH OF MR. McRAE

Chapel Hill was shocked shortly after noon on Friday at learning of the death of Mr. Alfred E. C. McRae. Mr. McRae was a young man from Fayetteville, a student in the University and a member of the Junior class. At about twelve o'clock Friday he went to Mrs. Donald's on a visit. Not finding his friends in their room he waited. Shortly afterwards he was found deathly sick, a bottle of cyanide of potash lying near telling the sad story of suicide.

REUNION MEETING OF THE PHI SOCIETY

The reunion meeting of the Phi Society last Saturday night was very enjoyable. There were not a great many of the alumni present, but among the few in the Hall feeling and remembrances of former days ran high.

After the President had been elected Capt. Howell, '60, was called on for a speech. Capt. Howell said, however, that he had never learned to think upon his feet, and so gracefully declined to speak. Rev. Mr. Smith, '70, was next called on. He responded in a speech full of reminiscences of the past. This was the first time since those dark days of Reconstruction that he had revisited his alma mater. Mr. Smith told of the visit to Chapel Hill of Andrew Johnston and Mr. Seward. The latter consented to become an honorary member of the Phi but when at his initiation the president read him the usual oath to keep the secrets of the society inviolate, Mr. Seward flatly refused to take it. Finally, however, this difficulty was overcome thru the tact of Mr. Busbee, then presiding. Mr. Smith told also of a famous debate that took place while he was here. Without fire and and in the biting cold the debaters staid in the old Phi Hall all night contesting the question.

Mr. Rodman, 78, next spoke for a few minutes. He paid a tribute to the Phi, saying that whatever success in life he had made as a lawyer was due in part to the training he received on the floor of the Society hall. He bade the present members to go out better men, better equipped to serve the State and Nation. Mr. Phillips next spoke. He told of the inspiration that all the surroundings at Chapel Hill gave him. "No institution stands higher. None has done more," he said.

Younger alumni began to speak now. After Mr. Barwick had declined to speak because, as he said, he had already done his part, Mr. Gaddy spoke. "In the development of the South", he said, "Carolina men have taken their part and are doing so now." Mr. Wilson followed Mr. Gaddy. He urged that the University be a place where men are not educated above their fellows, but for them. The students in the University and the alumni also must work to make the University help the common man. Messrs. Singletary, Bowen, Poe, and Lewis were called on in order. Mr. Smith arose again to propose a reunion of the Phi Society. Reunions were his especial hobby, he said. Great good would come from such a one as he suggested. The proposal was received with great approval. Just here the power man winked and in obedience to this warning the Society adjourned.
