

Just Dope

One of the editors of The Reveille (La.), being pushed for copy, shells out the following remarkable column of dope:

Come, gentle Muse, and help me to sing a ditty that's witty or any old thing. Ed. Robertson came in an awful big hurry, with a look on his face that spoke of great worry, saying: "Look here, Old Sport, there's the deuce to pay, and the cash-drawer is empty—get to work right away!" He says that the Reveille needs some more "dope," so I'll mount old Pegassus, and away on a lope. I haven't a notion which way we will go, but if we keep going we'll get somewhere, I know. And that's all I want, for I've just got to write, and hand in my "dope" before next Thursday night.

I might sing of Love. That's a popular theme, of which poets write, but still it don't seem to be just what I want at present, you see, for I'm in a great hurry and you will agree such a delicate topic we should handle with care, so I'll not sing of Love—'tis a topic too rare to be handled so lightly, but still I must sing, tho' I've nothing to sing of—not a darned thing. I could write something sad that would make you shed tears as big as potatoes, but for one of my years such lachrymose subjects are quite out of place, for a youngster looks best with a grin on his face. I could write something funny that would cause you to grin like a mule eating briars, but it is a sin to be always a-joking, so nix on the fun: but let me get started before I am done.

Now, what shall I write? Just give me a start. I'll do as you bid me, with all of my heart. Pegassus is prancing and chawin' the bits; he wants to be off, so assemble your wits, and give me a theme, before I decide to dismount from my steed without taking my ride. Whoa there! You onery brute, or I'll get down and land you a jolt on the snoot! Gol-darn the old noss! He's as spry as a colt! Gee! What was it that fell with a jolt! Was it me? Must have been, for Pegassus is fled and I am still sitting here holding my head.

So now, Mister Robertson, I earnestly hope that will suffice for your Reveille "dope"—S. S. in The Reveille, Louisiana State University.
