the laying of the corner-stone of the University. The addresses made on that occasion by Pres. Venable, Pres. Hill, of the A. and M.; Dean Smith, of the Normal; Pres. Wright, of the Eastern Training School; Pres. Rondthaler, of Salem Female College; Supt. Thompson, of the Jackson Training School, and of C. L. Williams, of the student body, are published. Besides these the many greetings from the alumni are also printed, together with accounts of alumni banquets in many of the cities of the State. The names and addresses of last year's class are given. The Record contains notes concerning many of the older alumni. It also publishes the plan outlined for the organization of the alumni; a short account of the whereabouts of the faculty during the summer, and of the new members of the faculty, concludes the record.

the people in other professions.

"After a person has made the choice of teaching as his life work he should next choose the class of people that he would like to teach. Some people like to teach children in public schools; others like to teach young men or young women in preparatory schools or colleges. A person should be guided in this selection by the class of students he likes best or by the opportunities in the different classes of institutions. The next choice comes in the subjects a person would teach. One should be governed in this, also, by his love for the respective subjects. Some people like sciences best; others languages, history, economics, psychology or some other subject. A person should choose that subject which he likes best and does best in.

"A teacher must be a practical person, in order to influence those in his charge; he should have a love for his work also. A teacher who is practical and who loves his work, has a great opportunity for exerting a wholesome moral influence upon those over whom he has charge. No person who exerts a bad influence should be allowed to teach; indeed, there is quite as much opportunity for doing good in the profession of teaching as there is in the ministry. Every Yale man knows how true this is in regard to Dr. Wright, of Yale University. A college professor can be a center from which a strong moral influence radiates to every community into which one of his pupils goes."
