Ex-Editors Turn Loose

The story goes that a conscientious elder was subjecting his off spring to a sound thrashing. During a pause in the action the wielder of the rod seized the rascal by the nape of his neck and demanded, "Now, what do you say?" "I say nothing," was the reply. "Then what do you think?" "I think DAMN," came the response and forthwith the stalwart citizen of Heidelberg continued the thrashing with renewed vigor.

Now, the Tar Heel for Wednesday, Feb. 22, did not print the much cursed writenup of the Dramatic Club's performance of "She Stoops to Conquer" but it did let it get out that the write-up that, might have been, was a fair expression of the editor's views on the matter and, now, it seems as if the powers that be of Tammany Hall and Washington City have set out to spank the poor little sheet for what it thinks.

In verity, Mr. Editor of the Tar Heel, you have angered some people by this thought of yours and in retaliation, I cannot doubt that they will raise their daintily gloved fingers and smite you upon the wrist, "Like This" I can only hope that, after the dire punishment has been visited upon you, the smudge of sachet powder which will appear where you look for a bruise, will have a pleasant odor.

An Ex Tar-Heel Editor.

Such a hullaballo about a criticism! What is the TAR HEEL for? To pat on the back every joke that is brought forth by the labor of some student organization? The reporters on the Tar Heel staff write an honest criticism. Can anyone kick because a paper publishes an honest criticism? Perhaps those who rave so gloriously on the devilishness of the TAR HEEL reporter—albeit they assure themselves of a sympathetic audience before foaming at the mouth—perhaps they think the criticism dishonest. Then it becomes a personal matter. Hasn't one man in the crowd—or a half dozen of the woolly lambs—enough nerve to say that the reporter was dishonest and let him know they have so expressed themselves? Then if the Tar Heel was honest let this racket cease. If it was dishonest screw your courage to sticking point and go to headquarters with the tale.

Is this the first time the "near journalist" have roasted anything? Surely once last year some man in college had his tender feelings touched. But there was no such rabid discontent displayed. But now someone has laid a callous finger upon the tender lambkins of the melodrama. Their mirror of vanity has been breathed upon by the foul breath of an honest reporter, forsooth. And the quickened sympathy, that is always excited when a naughty child has been spanked, is now evinced in favor of the actors! If an honest criticism of a play can kill it, peace to its ashes.
