Progress of the Team

Captain Winston promises the "goods" as a leader. He is still off on many of the rules but with time will improve. His open field running shows form, but he has a tendency to run high on line plays, and he lacks cleverness as an interferer.

Tillet appears to have the call on Coffin at quarter and shows excellent form at times. He is still very slow on signals and will have to show a vast improvement in generalship if he wishes to lay claim to the title of being a "good quarterback."

Erwin, Wakeley, and Leak at half back show promise of developing into good men. Erwin is very erratic and is by no means a good interferer, but he shows occasional form in carrying the ball in a broken field. Wakeley and Leak are both fast men. The former is, however, is very erratic in his punting, and his defensive work so far has been poor. Leak is a new man in the back-field but looks good, and with a display of more aggressiveness should make an exceptional half back. Both Wakeley and Leak show lack of ability as interferers, and they will have to improve greatly in this respect. Leak appears to be a good defensive player.

Chambers, Wright, and Nicholson are fighting it out for full back. The first two men appear to have the call. Chambers is a hard, gritty player, but appears erratic at times and is not at all good in picking openings. Wright should make a good man. He appears fast and runs low, but shows a lack of aggressiveness. Nicholson appears inexperienced and consequently is very inconsistent in his play. His work will have to improve if he wants to keep pace with the other two full backs.

Coffin shows form in "practical kicking", but lacks ability when under fire. He is also slow in running the team and shows a lack of varsity experience. He possesses good qualities which should serve him well in overcoming these obstacles.

Manning at end is a hard worker and a heady player but his open field tackling and blocking are far below what they should be. He smashes interference well and should make a good defensive player. Clark, Applewhite, and Venable constitute the remaining ends that have received the most attention. They are all hard workers but have failed to show any first class ability. Their play has been erratic and inconsistent, and they will have to show great improvement or else the team will be weak on the ends.

Abernathy at right tackle should prove a tower of strength in the line. He has, however, shown little football so far and appears very slow at times. He will have to show improvement before the big games or the little men will make things hard for him.

Small is developing fast and it is a pleasure to see the big fellow work. He still shows inexperience at tackle and lacks ability in open field work but his good spirit and determination should serve him well in overcoming these deficiencies.

Ritch, Johnston, Orr, and Cowell have shown nothing of particular merit in their play. Johnston is a big man and fast for his size. With more experience and snap he should be a good lineman. Cowell lacks aggressiveness.
