AYCOCK MEMORIAL SERVICES

Held Last Sunday Afternoon in the Chapel of the University

HIS LIFE AND SERVICES EULOGIZED

Addresses Made by Prof. H. H. Williams, Dr. Edwin Mims, and Mr. C. W. Tillett, of Charlotte. Music by the University Quartette

Memorial services in honor of the late Governor Charles Brantley Aycock were held in the chapel of the University last Sunday afternoon. The services were in memory of a man both great and good, a man who, under the shade of Carolina's oaks, in her classrooms and on her campus, caught the inspiration for his great work for the State. It was most fitting, therefore, that the University that helped him as a college student should reverence his memory as a great North Carolinian.

The services were presided over by President Francis P. Venable. The invocation and benediction were spoken by Rev. H. W. Starr. Music was rendered by the University Quartette. Addresses were made by Prof. H. H. Williams on "Aycock as a College Student"; by Dr. Edwin Mims on "Aycock's Service to Education"; and by Mr. C. W. Tillett, of Charlotte, on "Aycock the Man in Public Life."

Prof. Williams was in college with Governor Aycock, and was thus able to speak with uncommon interest of Aycock's life at the University. Prof. Williams spoke of Aycock's acknowledged leadership in undergraduate affairs, of his dominant influence in college politics, of his high stand for clean politics, of the ease with which he, even as an undergraduate, organized and led men, and of his faculty of oratorical exposition. Prof. Williams then attempted to show in what way the University influenced Aycock, the independent student, jealous of his own right of self expression. Aycock did not draw his inspiration from books or from teachers, but from the University life, in the conditions that made up life at the University, and in the impartial application of standards which student life makes. In this sphere Aycock found his food. Here he opened his mind and spirit. Here he felt the deep hunger of the State for new life—saw that it must come through education.

Dr. Mims spoke of Aycock's service to education. Aycock's philosophy of education was, said Dr. Mims, the "bringing out of a boy or girl that which God Almighty has put in him or her." Extracts from his last speech were read to show that this philosophy of education meant a faith in democracy—a belief in the equality of opportunity, education not because of a sentimental pity for the people, not as a privilege, but as a necessity.

THIRD OF THE McNAIR LECTURES

Final Address Delivered by Dr. Hadley, Sunday Night, on "The Spiritual Basis of Recent Poetry"

The last of the McNair Lectures was delivered by President Arthur T. Hadley on Sunday night. The subject of the final lecture was "The Spiritual Basis of Recent Poetry." The largest crowd that has heard any one of the lectures was present.

In his lecture Dr. Hadley sought to show the change from the poetry of mysticism and peace of the early half of the 19th century to the poetry of struggle, of hope and preparation for the future of the latter half of the century. The successive stages by which these changes were brought about were given, together with illuminating quotations that illustrated the speaker's points.

An age of political complacency is also an age of religious complacency, said Dr. Hadley. When authority predominates the religious element is essentially mystical. The first half of the 19th century was one of peace; its poetry was that of calm and peace and complacency. In the latter part of the 18th century Blake had taught that life is a conflict between the individual man and the forces of repression with which God was identified. Rousseau, in France, Schiller and Goethe, in Germany, led in the movement to give opportunity to individual freedom and development. The French Revolution gave full play to these theories—and they failed. Men, with few exceptions, went back to the law of conventions. Literature became conventional. Poetry made no pretence of summoning men to a struggle. It was contemplative and romantic. Neither Wordsworth or Scott had any message to the fighting men of the day. Southey, Byron, Shelley, Keats—none of them had a message. All they left was but a row of splendid pictures.

Englishmen turned to the vital messages of Ruskin and Newman, but were disappointed in them, for their messages failed to meet the needs of the age. Yet one English poet did have a message with which he faced the past and prepared for the future. It was because of this message of preparation, this intellectual help given, that men turned to Robert Browning. It is because of this that his influence has steadily grown. His philosophy was that of giving to others the opportunity to realize what is in themselves. His was the poetry of lost causes—never so triumphant as when cast down. Browning believed as did Blake in individual vitality, but he did not link God with repression. "I have lived", was the cry of Paracelsus. And his living was positive one, in which the aim for power went hand in hand with the aim to help his fellowman. Browning taught that life is not so simple a thing as a struggle between right and wrong, for what is one man's right is another's wrong. We must find a bal-

ORGANIZATION OF PRESS MEN

College Men of South Atlantic States Form Association for the Promotion of Journalism

The Southern College Press Association is now in concrete form. It is a definite, live organization with every prospect for a glorious future. Last week representatives of seven leading universities of the South Atlantic States met in Columbia, S. C., for the purpose of considering the binding together of Southern college journalists for mutual benefit. The following institutions had representatives present: University of Virginia, William and Mary, V. P. I., University of North Carolina, University of South Carolina, Clemson, and University of Georgia. Charter membership was limited to the South Atlantic States for the practical reason of ease in organizing. Next year the entire South will be embraced, including institutions of the standing of Vanderbilt and Tulane. Membership is limited to those colleges which support at least a weekly and monthly publication. The number of Southern colleges which meet this requirement is at present surprisingly small, and one of the objects of the Association is to promote the establishment of newspapers and magazines in other colleges. The only colleges which were invited to join in the movement and were not represented at the Columbia convention were Washington and Lee, North Carolina A. and M., and Stetson University of Florida.

The credit for the founding of the Association is due Messrs. Broadus Mitchell and Sam Latimer, Jr., of the University of South Carolina. These men, both of whom have had journalistic experience on both college weeklies and city dailies, took up the matter sometime ago. The result of a voluminous correspondence—comprising over 300 letters—was the Columbia convention.

Everything possible was done for the entertainment of the delegates, who were tendered a dinner, a luncheon, and automobile ride over Columbia, a reception, and overwhelmed with various minor attentions. The festivities culminated Thursday night with the First Annual Southern College Press Association Ball, given by the German Club of the University of South Carolina.

The Association accepted a most cordial invitation to hold the second annual meeting next spring in Charlottesville with the University of Virginia. A bid for the next convention was also received from the city of Greensboro.

A constitution was adopted, and plans made for putting the organization upon a firm footing, the primary object being to give the college journalist the same intercollegiate intercourse enjoyed by the athlete and to some extent by the orator and debater. Officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows: President, Broadus

THE NAVY DEFEATS CAROLINA

Finely Contested Game Goes to Midshipmen by Score of 1 to 0

The midshipmen won from the University of North Carolina in a finely contested game at Annapolis, Md., April 20, 1 to 0. The game was a pitchers battle from start to finish, and there was little to choose between the work of Vinson, the cool-headed and reliable little middy, and Wood, who occupied the mound for the lads from the Tar Heel State. Though the middles secured three more hits than their opponents, Wood kept them well scattered, and the single run chalked up by the sailor boys was largely the result of errors.

In the first inning the middles bunched two singles and a sacrifice, but they could not get in a run. After that, honors between the opposing twirlers were about even. Clever work by the center-field man of each team, however, prevented a couple of long drives.

Osborne of the Navy, won the plaudits of the crowd when he hauled down Leak's deep drive to centre with his gloved hand, in the sixth inning; and he also made a fine catch of Bailey's long hit in the seventh. But it was like taking the starch out of Osborne in the eighth, when Page made a pretty running catch of Osborne's hit between center and right that looked good for at least two sacks.

The Navy lads got their single tally in the fifth inning. Hall, first man up, hit a grounder to short, which Winstead failed to handle properly, and the middy was safe. Hall stole second, and went to third on Wood's wild pitch. In the meantime, Wood issued a free pass to Osborne. Adams then hit a slow one to the pitcher, and the throw home was not in time to catch Hall.

CAROLINA CAPTURES TRACK MEET

67½ POINTS OUT OF A POSSIBLE 143

With Comparative Ease Carolina Sweeps the Six Other North Carolina Colleges Off Their Feet and Takes Nine Firsts

Before a crowd of about 1,000, Carolina ran away with the track meet Saturday taking nine first places, running up the score 67 1-2 points out of a total of 143. Carolina's large score was due to the well balanced team which showed the effect of good coaching. Wake Forest came second with a total of 33 points and A. and M. third with 24 1-2 points. Davidson, Trinity and Guilford finished in the order named, with 12, 4, and 2 points respectively. In addition to the other events a relay race was pulled off, Carolina also taking this, while the others came out in this order, Wake Forest, Davidson, A. and M., Trinity. There was some very pretty running, Patterson doing the two miles in 10 minutes and 10 seconds, with Cobb and Smith right at his heels. The mile was also run in good time being pulled off in 4 minutes 43 1-5 seconds. Good work was also done in the jumps, the high going to 5 feet 8 inches, with Woolcott winning, the broad to 20 feet 5 3/4 inches, with Hutchins winning, and the pole vault to 10 feet 4 inches, with Strong winning. This makes the second meet Carolina has taken, thus getting the cup for another year. She also got the cup given for the relay race. In addition to these events, while the field events were being pulled off, a discus throw was held, Floyd winning by throwing 117 feet 6 inches. This, however, is not counting in the points.
