THE BASEBALL TEAM

Not within the past four years has the student body evinced so little interest in the baseball team as this spring. We have had a fine team too. It has played winning ball. We have a good, popular, hard working Coach in Mr. Doak; yet the students have refused to get very excited about the team.

The cause is very simple, very disheartening to lovers of true Carolina athletics. The team is not in spirit a product of Carolina. Five of the regulars played on other college teams before they came here. Their motives in coming here, we do not know. We have our opinion.

We overheard a member of the Faculty the other day talking to a group of students. This man is a keen lover of athletics and not a man who would interpret athletic regulations from a hard, unsympathetic viewpoint. The substance of his remarks was, this is not a representative team. Very few of its members take an interest in college life or have any organic part in it. On the other hand, he said, the football team last fall came wholly out of the college life and was supported by the whole student body.

Two Seniors were watching one of the early season games. "I believe that every man on our team this year has played summer ball for money, except two," remarked one. "Yes," replied the other, "I guess A and B are all right."

"I was thinking of B and C," answered the first. Their estimate was probably a little too pessimistic.

We make no direct charges of any kind. We simply state that we believe a large number of students believe these things to be so. Where there is smoke there is apt to be fire. If anyone disagrees with these statements these columns are open to him. There will be only one more Tar Heel this year.

THE DEBATES

Last fall The Tar Heel objected to the efforts of the Debating

Council to schedule a Fall Debate. Our objection was that there was not enough time to arrange and work up a debate. No debate was arranged; not because of our humble objections, but because of failure to get an opponent. The Debating Council argued that there was enough material in college to put out three teams and that the fall preliminaries would train men for the Spring Debates.

Saturday night, the first time in twenty years of intercollegiate debating, Carolina lost a series when Johns Hopkins defeated Carolina at Charlottesville. We won the debate against them two years ago and have lost the last two.

Our opinion, as before expressed, is that the Literary Societies and debating do not occupy relatively as important a position in student life as they formerly did. If Carolina is to maintain the past record some decisive changes or improvements must be made.

We would like to ask the Debating Council if they still think that a Fall Debate would help train and develop material. If they do, we suggest they arrange a Fall Debate NOW.

UNTIL THE DAY THEREOF

There are only about 152 working hours between now and final examinations. There is a limit to the things that can be done within that time. Every year there are the usual number who have put off parallel reading, laboratory work, reserving special reports until it is too late. This year there will probably be the usual number. Our advice is to let it be the other fellow.

This year has been filled with an unprecedented number of special events and interesting happenings. There have been wonderful opportunities to see national figures in political and educational fields.

We have participated in many, new, significant movements on the campus. But these are history. The question of the day is: are we going to let all these disturbers of the even tenor of recitations lower our standard of scholarship. In other words, are you going to let your 4 study degenerate into a 5, or your possible 3 into a 4 and so on up the line? There is a good probability that you will unless you make an unusual effort from now on.

CAROLINA WINS AGAIN

Carolina Wins from Baptists in Big League Style

(Carried over from last week.)
In the second game of the series between the two institutions Carolina defeated Wake Forest 10 to 0. The winning of the other game has been called a fluke, but no such interpretation can be placed on the result of last Tuesday's game. With Shields pitching at his best and good allround support coupled with terrific clouting, the game was simply a walkover.

Ellis started the game for Wake Forest and lasted only two innings. A home run, a double, and five singles were made off his delivery before he was taken from the box. Moore, who took his place, allowed four hits in the remaining seven innings. Billings and Davis also assisted Carolina by making six errors.

For Carolina Honig lead in the hitting—getting a home run and two singles out of four trips to the plate. His home run was hit when three men were on the bases. Lewis and Patterson secured two hits each. Bruce also got a triple and Zollicoffer a double.

It is enough to say that Carolina played the game that she is capable of playing. The good people of Raleigh had a chance to see just how good a team Coach Doak has gotten together, both offensively and defensively. No such a hitting college aggregation has performed in Raleigh in many a day.
