DRESSING ROOM GOSSIP

Dear Matilda,
I've been rooting around in the mud of knowledge all fall, like a mud terrapin going to the swamp for the winter, because it got so deep I went all the way under. You see, in this place, where brains are more important than anything else, you have to get plumb saturated with intelligence to keep in the swim. So I buried myself in the mud, so to speak, and tried to make as much of it stick on my back as I could. About two weeks ago, those who had already got about as much as a man can carry, gave the rest of us a chance to stick our heads above the mire, and show how much had stuck. I must have been a powerful slick one, for most of mine slid off. I didn't get above a 2 on anything. I don't mean I got any 2's, but what I mean is, I didn't get anything higher than that. They don't give anything lower than six, so I guess that's the reason they haven't posted some of my grades. Maybe they thought it wasn't safe, though, because the boys raise such a riot when they do post them. It's a wonder somebody hasn't been jerked loose from an arm or leg or head be fore now.

I went to see all my professors about my grades, because once there was a boy who got a five and he thought surely there must be some mistake about it, and he went to his professor to find out. And he found out there was a mistake, sure enough, for he ought to had a six. But I allowed they could just as well make a mistake one way as another. So I asked one of them if he could have possibly made a mistake, or oversights a little something, or gotten me mixed up with somebody else. But he shooed me out with a book, and said he didn't have time to get mad right then. I told him I wanted him to go over my book with me, and show me where I was wrong, but he said it would take him far less time to show me where I was right, only it wasn't necessary, as I would have a chance to find out all that next year, when I took the course over. You see, a college professor has to look out for his reputation, because if it ever got out on him that he had made a mistake, he'd have no more chance than a whistle in a whirlwind. They are unmakeable, because you can never mistake one for anything else, and because they are never mistaken.

But I didn't want to give up, so I went to another and told him that I had made several unpardonable errors on my exam, and I guessed I'd got more than I deserved, and maybe he could give me a little advice that would help me in the future. And he brought out my paper and read over it again, saying that he had gone over it a little hurriedly before, and perhaps it wasn't as bad as he had thought. Sure enough, I made a better mark on that course in these few minutes than I had made in a whole fall's hard work. It takes diplomacy to get a diploma.

This school is certainly different from the one up home. We haven't had a spelling match all fall, and they don't have any trustees coming in the classroom to scare you with a lot of hard questions like we used to sometimes.

I'd give a heap to see you now, and I bet you look fine in your new red dress. Anyway, one

This Matter Stands THIS WAY

When you go to your Tailor to order a Suit of Clothes you're governed by his idea of what sort of a Suit you should have. Few men know for themselves what's what. After your Suit or Overcoat is made you can tell whether or not you like it. But if you don't like it, you kind 'o feel you have to take it, anyway. That's not very pleasant. Now, then—what we want to say to you, Men, is this:— We make a study of Men's Clothing—study the details—study everything that will in any way tend to the production of perfect clothes for all sorts of Men. Then we have the Clothes built by the best Tailors in the Land. Men who understand their business. We'll astonish Men who have never been here for Clothes with the high class of tailoring in our ready-to-wear garments. And you don't have to take any garment that is not perfectly satisfactory in every respect.

Startling Discovery

The world of Physics has just been electrocuted,—beg pardon, electrified by the recent discovery of a noted Sophomore (name held by censor) who has exploded the old and prehistoric theories concerning Momentum, and has announced the following as an example of the new theory of the phenomenon: "When a body runs forward a little while, and then suddenly stops, it continues going in a straight line, and the above is called Momentum."

The preliminaries for the selection of two teams, one on each side of the question, will be held in March. The finals will take place on April 29th.
