BEAUTIFUL COSTUMES AND EFFECTIVE ACTING MAKE PAGEANT GREAT SUCCESS

Curtis Henderson as Ariel, Mr. Long as Touchstone, and Prof. McKie's Pyramus and Thisbe Troupe the Stars

The general opinion of the campus and visitors is that the Shakespearian Pageant, given on the campus Tuesday, was a success in every particular. All the costumes were unusually effective and their coloring and appearance were very striking in the procession as it moved from Memorial Hall to the scene of the performance near the Arboretum.

It would be hard to find any where such a finished group of amateur actors as those who took part in the performance. Most of the laurels for acting go to Mr. Edgar Long, who made a real Touchstone. He created a real character from the lines and as for his acting, he has been generally judged to be the star performer of the production. He says it was his first public appearance but the Prof. before his name stands for professional now. And Buck Wimberly was a real Autolycus. His acting showed that he had given the character of the ballad-seller an adequate interpretation.

The Fairy Play by the school children was a well-staged part of the performance. Their work was good and showed careful training.

The "Henry IV" scenes have received very favorable comment. Dr. Booker, as Prince Hal, gave a splendid interpretation of his part. His acting showed careful study and his interpretation was in rank with the best work of the performance. Perhaps Charlie Coggin was not the stoutest Falstaff that has ever appeared but no fault can be found with his acting. In the renunciation scene he was at his best. His Falstaff is a fitting climax to his versatile and admirable work in the dramatic field during his 4 years in college.

No other group showed quite the finish in training as did Mr. McKie's bunch of hard handed Athenian laborers who presented the romantic tragedy of "Pyramus and Thisbe," in the "Midsummer Night's Dream" scenes. It would be hard to find a better quince than Mr. McKie's interpretation. His work showed a carefulness of finish and an effectiveness in restraint that characterizes real acting. Bob House has done many things well in college, but nothing better than Pyramus. Dougald Macmillan as Thisbe was one of the stars of the scene. Lacy Meredith in the heavy role of the wall received his due amount of applause; and Billy Steele with his lanthorn, dog and thorn-bush was a dignified moonshine.

Mr. Bernard with his clear enunciation and smooth tone admirably handled Hamlet's speech to the players.

"The Tempest" was the last scene of the performance but did not fail for that reason to hold the attention of the whole audience. Dr. Dey was a splendid Prospero. His lines were spoken in a clear, carrying tone that never failed to hold the attention of the audience. Miss Gypsy Barton made an excellent Miranda. Jim Capps undertook successfully the role of Caliban. The dancing of Miss Curtis Henderson as Ariel the servant sprite of Prospero was one of the features of the performance.

The quartette and chorus music together with the incidental music of the orchestra added much toward making the whole performance a finished, artistic success. One notable feature and one we rarely find in an amateur production was that the entire performance was staged on schedule time.

The successful production of the Pageant has revealed the fact that such a thing can be adequately done by the students. Why not some sort of celebration—a play, folk dances, or May-day festival—every spring?
