day waiting at the Post Office window (most of us have given up our boxes) all for a notice from the library that a fine of 5 cents per day is accumulating on certain books which have been accumulating dust, undisturbed, in our rooms for weeks.

It would be impossible to describe the mingled sensations which overcome us at the prospect which we have anticipated for nine long months. Chemistry students express it by saying that they are saturated with joy. The proteges of Horace philosophically remark that "God reveals Himself in many ways". Med students simply nudge each other somewhere in the region of the pectoralis major (whatever that is), and smile at the thought that other viands than those mentioned above will be exciting peristaltic motion in the region of the medulla oblongata before long. The lawyers fortify themselves against the heat and the ordeal of the approaching exams in the assurance that the University is under a quasi contractual obligation to return to them that which ex ergo et bono belongs to them as bona fide citizens, to wit, the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, all of which they are deprived of here in the township of Chapel Hill. Whereas, it is up to the said University to turn them loose before the first of the month, or answer to a charge of detune, which means wrongful detention of an artical rightfully received.

Of course, some of the wise old sad birds will say that this artical shows a mighty un-university-like spirit, and a lack of loyalty, but we couldn't love Chapel Hill so much, loved we not the home burgh more.

DRESSING ROOM GOSSIP

Not many more times will we nudge our neighbor at supper and ask him to pass the "Review of Reviews". Not much longer will we wrestle with steak so tough that the gravy will turn the edge of the knife. Or experience the "peculiar pleasure", (to use Billy Noble's favorite expression) of swiping the dessert of all those unavoidably detained on class when the 1:30 bell rings. Or, when we suggest to the waiter that he give us fish like we had last week, that this is not so good, receive an abusive retort, coupled with the statement that there can be no difference, as this is a piece of the very same fish! Or even moisten our corn flakes with milk which verily hath the odor, the flavor, the aroma, and all the essence of the onion. Or spend at least two good hours a
