MORE TIME BETWEEN CLASSES

From Saunders Hall to Chemistry or Alumni Buildings is a mighty brisk five-minute walk. This we have discovered in futile attempts each day to make prompt connections on certain classes. Complaints have been registered by many students that the distance between some of the class buildings is too far for the five minutes allowed between classes. This winter when coats and wraps will have to be worn and when the ground is oftentimes covered with snow, which will slow up navigation considerably, this fact will become even more discernible.

The remedy for the situation is very simple. If seven minutes were given between classes, ample time would be provided for an easy gait between any of the buildings, provided the professors let the students out of each class promptly with the bell. One way to give seven minutes between each class would be to start the morning classes with the first bell ringing at 8:15 instead of 8:25. This would be starting the morning classes ten minutes earlier, which would give two extra minutes for the changing of all the classes, by arranging the following class hours accordingly. There would, of course, be no difficulty at all in arranging the two afternoon class periods in like manner.

Even with this extra time between periods, in order that students will be enabled to reach all classes on time, it will be necessary for the professors to turn out all his classes promptly with the bell each day. We know of certain members of the faculty who have the irritating habit of keeping their classes several minutes after closing time, apparently forgetting the fact that the students have other classes to attend, with the possibility of tardiness being charged against them. Students do not like to go on classes late, and it is a constant worry to professors to suffer the interruptions of men coming in after the class has begun.

Until more time is given between classes, and the professors abide strictly by the rule of allowing students to leave when the bell rings, this tardiness is going to be more and more in evidence as winter comes on. We merely offer the above schedule as a suggestion. Probably a better one could be worked out.

DORM SOCIAL ROOMS

The organization of each of the new dormitories for social advantages is a great step. It is understood that the University has agreed to place the necessary furniture in a suitable room in each of these buildings, which will give the occupants a place to lounge and loaf and become acquainted with each other. It will, to use a stereotyped phrase, "fill a long felt need."

Last year when so much talk of culture courses and needs of social advantages for University students was in evidence on the campus and in the state at large, the Tar Heel advocated the University setting a room aside in each of these dormitories for the purpose described. The Tar Heel still believes that this will be welcomed by the students, and will serve a great good.

Good fellowship, the formation of long friendships, has long been recognized as one of the fine functions of college. It is well to begin in one's own dormitory. The social room for those that live in the new structures on the campus should prove an ideal means for making these acquaintances. What a pity that there is no such room in every rooming house on the campus!

TAKE ADVANTAGE, FRESHMEN

The Counsellor System for freshmen, if it functions as it proposes—and we believe that it will—should return to the University next fall a much larger percentage of the class than has been the case in the past. Without proper guidance and individual interest from the faculty, freshmen in the years that have gone before have been left to their own salvation, and in many cases, disastrously so.

We do not believe in "petting" or "coddling" the freshmen. Such an accusation has been made against Yale, which employs a great freshman system after which the plan adopted by the University is modelled on a much modified scale. But we do not see how this could hardly be called "coddling." Every year it seems that the freshman class is composed of younger members in age. They come here with a very hazy conception of the workings of a great University. The freedom that exists first makes the greatest impression, and sometimes contributes to their downfall. Owing to lack of proper guidance, each year a large number of the class are unable to return in their sophomore years because of not enough work passed.

The freshmen are urged to take advantage of this counsellor system. The fifty members of the faculty that have volunteered their services in this department are to be commended for their step. They are very anxious that they might serve in more than name only. First year men should go to them for any advice they wish, consult them on all the problems and perplexities that may arise, and do these things before it is too late. If the men will only take advantage, the system will surely avert many wrecks.

JUNIOR CLASS ELECTS HOLSHOUSER PRESIDENT

The race for vice-president was equally one-sided. Otto Giersh defeated Harold Griffin by a vote of 123 to 52. There were no other candidates for this office.

The sudden decision of C. Y. Coley, president-elect last spring, to leave Carolina for the purpose of entering the Yale law school, left the Junior class minus both president and vice-president, Al Johnson, elected to the latter office, being at State College this year. It was for the purpose of filling these vacancies that the recent election was held.

Dr. L. R. Wilson made a trip to Charlotte Thursday, where he addressed the local alumni association.

GYM VERY INADEQUATE FOR FRESHMAN CLASS

Six hundred new men have been given thorough physical examinations by Dr. Lawson and his assistants in the gymnasium. The gym has become so inadequate for the needs of the large student body that many of those freshmen who are in the best physical condition have necessarily been excused from gym work.

The work for those who need it most, however, has been greatly increased. Each freshman who is not excused is expected to report to the gym five times a week instead of three. Another new feature is the 10 or 15 basketball teams which Dr. Lawson intends to run every day in 30-minute periods.

In another week wrestling and boxing teams will be formed.

The gymnasium assistants are Gholson and Spencer, both of whom have previously won their letters on the gym team. Both assisted Coach Fetzer last summer at Camp Sapphire.

RUSSIAN SYMPHONY ARTISTS CAPTIVATE LARGE AUDIENCE

selection with the thought of the difficulties involved subordinated to the musical message contained.

Beginning with an Overture by Tannhauser and ending with the Triumphal Procession from "Aida," the program offered a wide range of music, and was well received by the large audience, which was unstinted with its applause. "Pilgrim's Chorus," from the opening number, was beautifully played. The "Soldier's Song" and "Tinkle, Tinkle," both composed by Mr. Altschuler, were very beautiful, and perhaps received more applause than any other numbers, owing perhaps to the introduction given them by the composer in his winning manner. The "Mazurka Dance," by Liadoff, was well rendered, the audience frequently breaking into laughter at the vivid interpretation of the buzzing mosquitoes.

The program closed with "Dixie" as an encore to the "Triumphal Procession from "Aida." The orchestra tightened its grip on its audience more than ever with this national anthem of the South, bringing them to their feet during the midst of the playing. The orchestra itself rose in a body as the last strains of the Southern favorite burst in the air.
