FEEDING THE MULTITUDE IS SUBJECT OF SERMON

Dr. Sparks W. Mellon Delivers Second University Sermon of Calendar Year.

The second University sermon of the year 1923 was delivered in Gerrard Hall Sunday night by Dr. Sparks W. Mellon, of Norfolk, Va. He based his sermon on the story of the feeding of the multitude by Jesus, showing how an antithesis between human and divine viewpoints was exemplified in this miracle.

First of all Dr. Mellon spoke of the human attitude displayed in this story. The disciples were loath to attempt procuring food for the multitudes assembled by Galilee to hear Christ's teachings. "This," said the speaker, "was characteristic of human nature. Man will always follow, if he can, the path of least resistance. He is inclined to seek some way out of a situation which will result in very little effort on his part. The disciples wished to send the people away to get food for themselves. "All of us," he continued, "are prone to shirk responsibility. The disciples had nothing to do with bringing the multitudes together on that particular occasion. They came of their own volition. Then why trouble themselves with them? Let them depart as they came, and get nourishment wherever they could find it. Again, when a question arises, when a situation involving real effort is encountered, man usually endeavors to plead inability. The disciples had only five loaves and two fishes, and were not eager to be troubled with providing for the assembly. They had nothing with which to feed them; therefore, why not drop the matter? But Jesus said, 'How many loaves have ye? Go and see.' The problem was solved, and the multitude went away filled."

Turning then to the religious or divine side of the question, Dr. Mellon stated that everything might be looked on from a religious viewpoint. He stressed the fact that it was through the disciples themselves that Christ fed the throng. "He might easily have turned the stones into bread," he said, "but this was not Christ's way of doing. He worked through his followers to perform the miracle. It is even so today. He does very little within Himself, but looks to mortals to carry out His work. When men feel discouraged and ready to give up, let them remember how little Christ had to work with. His disciples had very little of the world's goods; neither had they any too much faith. Yet from tottering remnants Christ built His mighty kingdom on earth through the help of man. He expects of every one according to his ability, according to the number of 'loaves' that he has."

STEINER'S TALK PRAISED BY THE GASTONIA DAILY

J. F. Steiner, head of the extension bureau of community development, returned last Friday from a very successful mass meeting of the citizens of Gastonia at which he delivered the chief address of the evening. The subject of the address was: "Attainable Standards for Social Agencies." The Gastonia Daily in speaking of the address says, "Dr. Steiner made one of the most practical talks on relief and welfare work that has ever been heard in Gastonia."

The mass meeting was one of the largest and most representative gatherings ever brought together on such an occasion in the county court house. The chief action of the meeting was the placing of all the local charity and welfare work on a more constructive basis by centralizing the relief in one office. Representatives were present from every walk of life and all declared that the local welfare department was doing a great work and that under the new plan of centralizing the relief in one office the officials would be able to meet every local need.
