DR. DAVID FRIDAY
 case on industrial attainment alone," he said. "We must try to raise the standard of our workers and people in general."
 Wednesday morning at the second period Professor Friday spoke on "The Future of Prices and the Interest Rate." All the classes in the Commerce school were called off in order that the students might go to hear the lecture. Again Professor Friday was optimistic in regard to economic conditions in the country. He declared that he believed a general fall in prices was coming. He spoke of the condition of the farmer and of his problems.

He further prophesied an enormous decline in the costs of production for a continuous series of years. The lecturer showed that interest rates are more dependent upon the demand for capital than upon supply of capital. As far as the banking system is concerned we are all about right, he explained, but added that the bond market should be watched carefully.

CAROLINA MAGAZINE

 of facts have been brought to our attention during the past few days. Fuller's researches are enjoyable because they are concerned specifically with Carolina men.

The most intelligible story and one of the best written of this issue is "One Fine Afternoon" by Mary Calhoun Henley. It is certainly an amusing situation in which the staid old gentlemen find themselves. Any story in which mosquitoes and yellow jackets appear is usually a live one.

The "Itch" tickled us to death. It is a definition and explanation of a common malady with detailed description of its various stages.

"Alfred in Puppet Land" turned out to be Gulliver's Travels in miniature, with a local application. We grasped the point of this article in general but not in detail.

The gist of the article "Publica Americana Magna" is explained in the editor's comment on same, said comment being that the writer of the article "assists Barnum in the argument which made him famous." And, indeed, according to the author, we are a race of suckers, ever mistaking shadow for substance. He paints it pretty black, all right, and leaves himself open to attack on several points, but there is enough fact about his article to get a good share of credit.

We nominate Miss Katherine Wilson for cheer leader! She has found the Old Carolina Spirit that we thought we had lost and which has been mourned as dead. However, it appears that she has confused freedom with spirit to a certain degree. "What Carolina Has Meant to a Col-Ed" literally bubbles over with college patriotism liberally supported by quotations from Kipling, Wordsworth, and passages from several songs including the college anthem. We suppose that the editor inserted the comment to the title, "You Don't Know the Half of it, Dearie." It must be confessed that we don't see the point or the wisdom of such an insertion.

There is an abundance of poetry this month. Some of it was evidently used to fill space, and in this capacity it is probably functioning in its proper sphere. A few passages, however, are very readable.

The editor started on the war-path "In Self Defense" in which he takes a fling at his critics and at the same times make some clarifying explanations concerning the problems that he has confronted in getting out the magazine. In another editorial he deals very well with a problem that the campus is facing at the present time, that of unification. Aside from a tendency to ramble, the editor, most of the time, handles his subjects in a fairly commendable manner.

If you smoke a pipe
 (if you don't you ought to)
 it may be worth your while to read this

You know tobacco is a vegetable; it grows out of the ground, and when it's green, it is too harsh and strong to smoke. The very best way to remove that harshness and bitterness is by thorough ageing in wood. To age Velvet Tobacco in wood is expensive for us—yes, very expensive, and it takes time, but it gives you a milder, cooler smoke with a finer flavor.

It's 10 to 1 you'll like Velvet Tobacco—aged in wood.

Playmakers Play To Their Largest House
 The Carolina Playmakers played before their largest house in their history Friday night when three one-act plays were given in Raleigh before the North Carolina Education Association. Thirty-seven hundred people turned out to see the series.

The plays presented were "Fixins," by Erma and Paul Greene, "Gaius and Gaius Jr.," by Mary Cobb and "The Black Rooster," by Pearl Setzer. The troupe returned to the Hill to prepare for examinations and the Spring tour which will begin about April 9th. This trip will be through the western part of the state.
