SAM AND MARY NOW PRACTICING LAW IN ASHEVILLE

took down their replies in long hand.

The two new lawyers do not consider that they are under any insuperable handicap as they start out to practice law. They believe that the proper application of the mind will yield the results desired. They will hire a stenographer who will also serve as a reader for them. If energy, ability, personality and willingness to serve count for anything, these two young men should succeed.

Mr. Cathey did not lose his sight until his 19th year. As a child he attended the Smoky Hollow School in the Mills River section, where he studied two years. Sam and his family then moved to Skyland, where he attended the Limestone district school for four years. He then went four years to Christ school, operated by the Episcopal church, and located 12 miles from Asheville.

He then went one year to the Winn school on Merrimon avenue, in Asheville. In the fall he played football and was a lineman.

In the end of the school year in 1910 he went to work for his father in the railroad construction business.

In June, 1913, he quit working for his father and secured a job with Lee J. Smith and R. Pain Smith, railroad contractors, of Morristown, Tenn. He went to work as a foreman on the Carolina-Virginia extension from Abingdon, Va., to Todd, N. C. On December 15, 1913, he and his men were engaged in shooting out a rock cut about 11 miles from Jefferson. Two holes had been made and dynamite placed in them. Sam was to light one and one of his men the other. After Sam had lighted his and it had exploded, the laborer told him that the other failed to light. Triple time was allowed for it to explode and then Sam went back to investigate. The fuse was not burning or smoking and showed no signs of being on fire. Sam cut off a piece of the fuse and was stooping down when the dynamite exploded in his face. The force of the explosion knocked him back about 25 or 30 feet into the New river. He was temporarily unconscious, but soon came to and climbed back up the river bank. As a result of this accident Sam lost the use of his eyes. He can recognize light, but cannot discern an object.

After the accident Cathey was in a hospital in Winston-Salem for four days and was then removed to Asheville, where he remained in the Meriwether hospital for four months.

After he was discharged from the hospital Mr. Cathey rested several months, recovering as best he could from his mishap, and then made arrangements to enter the State School for the Blind at Raleigh.

Back in school, Mr. Cathey reviewed some of the work he had had before he became blind and endeavored to adjust himself to his new conditions. He took high school courses, and studied reading and writing by the embossed method. He also studied typewriting.

Mr. Cathey took an active part in the life of the school. At this school he met Mr. Worsham and formed a friendship that has steadily grown as the years go by. They made plans together to enter the University together and have roomed together for many years.

In the spring of 1919 Mr. Cathey graduated from the State School and in the fall entered the University of North Carolina. During his first year at the University he studied hard and made many friends, thus laying a foundation on which he erected the superstructure of success at the University.

During his sophomore year he was class representative on the campus cabinet, the student organ of campus reform. He also joined the Latin-American club, and at the end of the year was initiated into membership in Epsilon Phi Delta, which has since become a chapter of the National Order of Cosmopolitan Clubs.

The beginning of Mr. Cathey's political career centered in the Dialectic Literary Society, a hotbed for campus politics. His first fight as a political leader was when he backed one of his friends for the office of president of the society. After a hard fought contest his candidate won and Sam embarked on a campus political career characterized by great brilliance. His political headquarters were in Pettigrew No. 2 where he and Mr. Worsham roomed for four of the five years they spent at Chapel Hill.

Sam always refused his support to a man he considered unfit for the job to which he aspired. His candidate had to be straight, and he had to have the ability to carry out the functions of his office after the election, whether he be fraternity man or non-fraternity man.

Sam declares he went into the game of campus politics because he desired to get closer to his fellow students, to know them, and to create a greater interest in campus activities on the part of the students. He considers the Chapel Hill campus the greatest in the world, and he has great admiration for student self-government and the honor system in operation there.

In his fourth year at the University Cathey entered the law school, and was elected president of the first year law class.

In June, 1923, he and his partner, Mr.

Worsham, received their degrees. As Governor Morrison presented the sheepskins to the two blind students the large audience broke forth into spontaneous applause in appreciation of the splendid achievements of these two men.

In his fifth and last year at the University Mr. Cathey represented the second year law class on the student council. His political ticket went through almost unanimously.

In fact, Mr. Cathey never lost a major political fight during the three years he was active in politics.

Mr. Cathey takes great interest in athletic contests. He went to all the games if he could possibly get there, and his voice was often heard encouraging the Carolina teams on to victory.

Mr. Worsham was born in Campbell county, Va., December 10, 1898.

Up to the time he was 16 years old, Mr. Worsham could see partially, but not good enough for study in the public schools. An accident when he was 16 years old made him totally blind.

In 1909 he entered the State School for the Blind at Raleigh, where he stayed ten years. He took grammar school and high school work and made a good record. He played first alto in the school band and was popular among the students. He took part in several of the debates, and was a member of the Union Debating society. He did splendid work in the gymnasium.

Besides the regular high school work he studied the embossed type typewriting, piano tuning and other things. He is an expert piano tuner, and has a diploma in this. He studied hard at the school and made an all-around good record. In the fall of 1919, together with Mr. Cathey, he entered the University of North Carolina.

During his first year at the University Mr. Worsham studied hard. He averaged over 94 per cent during his first year, and 91 per cent on all his academic work during his college career. His law school average was also high.

In his fourth year, he received his letter in gymnasium work. The attainment of this "NC" is a difficult feat, for 65 stunts, some of them doubles and triples, had to be performed to the satisfaction of five judges. In 1922 Mr. Worsham was in an intercollegiate exhibition at Raleigh where he received great applause.

Mr. Worsham is tremendously interested in athletics, especially football. He does not remember having missed an athletic contest at the University. If he missed one he never intended to, he declares. Mr. Worsham often sat on the players' bench and had some one to tell him the various plays. He yelled for the team and was more than enthusiastic over University victories.

Why Do We Advertise?

As a business we are interested in your giving the Laundry a real test.

We can show you first hand the real advantage thus attained.

Not only through the standpoint of SANITATION—but decidedly through the longer life of the garments and the linens, and the return of each article.

This more than offsets an apparently greater cost.

Clearly understand, that we do not desire to be officious.

Your Laundry, just like any other expense is an INDIVIDUAL PROBLEM.

Before the laundry of an entire student body can be placed upon a real basis of efficiency—we must co-operate—all must fit into numerous governing elements.

We do not presume to know everything—but are trying mighty hard to inject system and scientific principles in the actual fact.

It is our business to serve you with SATISFACTION and we shall ever strive to maintain a service to please.
