PARAGRAPHS

Congratulations to Mr. Brewster.

A political speech upon such a high plane is indeed worthy of congratulations.

More of our present day political orators could well model after such political tactics.

His speech certainly gives one something to think about without leaving a disdainful taste.

But we should not say too much in praise of the Republican campaigner, because this is a Democratic state.

And the Legislature might take offense at the dear institution and cut down the appropriations because of the naughty students.

But we have to hand it to a man when he does as well as did the governor-elect of Maine, even though we might be of another political sect.

We notice that the Botany Department has just received some seeds reputed to be over five hundred years old. Congratulations are also in order to this department of the University.

It is certainly a signal honor to the University to be the possessor of some five hundred year old lotus seeds. Our suggestion is that the department have one of the seeds planted near the dear old well. A lotus plant would look good there.

STUDENTS AND NATIONAL POLITICS

The nation is now in the midst of one of the most interesting national political campaigns on record. Newspapers are carrying daily front page space in regard to the activities of the campaigners of the political parties with candidates in the field. Although many opportunities are offered to the American College student to become informed concerning the issues and events of the presidential campaign, comparatively little interest is being manifested.

When one considers that the news of today is the history of tomorrow, he must be impressed with the peculiar state of conditions in which we have students paying hardly any attention to the turn of national affairs at present, and yet realizing that they will be studying them as events of history a few years hence.

Our plea is for a deeper and more serious interest in the affairs of the nation. The lack of this seriousness of intent and interest in events has resulted in the college student being dubbed as a flippant rah rah boy whose sole interest lies within the realms of sport and other comparative fields. We do not overlook the viewpoint of many that this carefree spirit of the college boy is but the training period for a later seriousness. But even the most of the nation will not remove this extremists will be forced to admit that more attention and interest in the affairs training period of the settled and seriously inclined older man.

There are signs of a deeper interest being developed among the student element. In this we take much hope and expectation, but we confess that a still greater awakening on the part of student opinion would not be amiss to us at all.

To be specific is to carry the analysis to one's own self. For example how many students know that there are no less than eight political parties with written platforms adopted in political conventions with candidates for the presidency in the running? One might say that there are not many laymen in the outside that know this. But the mere mention of such an excuse by comparison is a reflection upon the very word "student".

Under the auspices of the student body political speeches are being made here in which the platforms of the main parties are being explained, supported and attacked. The appearance of nationally known political figures should in itself be the means of assembling a large audience from the student body.

The crowd out to hear Campaigner Brewster was, while larger than the usual University lecture audience, not sufficiently large enough to demonstrate a wide spread interest in public affairs.

Until the American college element becomes more seriously interested in national affairs, it will remain labeled by the outside world as the rah rah type.

CAROLINA'S MUSICAL APPRECIATION

In the TAR HEEL advance notice of Miss Knox's recital on the thirtieth, the reporter states that "she will probably present a light program this fall, for that sort of program has been most popular with the students here."

It would be unfortunate if Miss Knox would feel because of this statement that she is not free to present a program of wide enough scope to allow her to show her great capability as a musician. It seems pertinent to suggest that Carolina would appreciate a program a bit more serious and of more depth than the one presented last year. Familiarity with an artist's program brings to the hearer a certain sense of smug contentment, but it does not bring any inclination for growth in one's musical appreciation.

We hope that Miss Knox will feel free to give on her program numbers which will rank with the Faust Selection which she gave last year, and save the lighter selections for her encores and for the response which she has always so graciously given on the steps of Memorial Hall after the recital. Carolina is anxious to hear Emilie Rose Knox's best and deepest offerings before she sails.

TAR BABIES INVADE U. S. C. CHICKEN YARD

Coach Grady Pritchard Takes Twenty-two Yearlings With Him to Columbia.

The Tar Babies left Friday night for Columbia, S. C., where they will play the University of South Carolina Biddies this afternoon.

Little is known of Biddies' strength, but the young Tar Heels displayed great strength in their scrimmage with the varsity last Tuesday, and showed that much improvement has taken place since the Bingham game. Bo Shepherd, another one of the Wilmington Shepherds, broke loose and made a long run for a touchdown against Captain Matthews' veteran crew. Isor also showed up exceedingly well.

Coach Grady Pritchard took the following 22 men with him on the trip: Tenney, Ferrel, Shepherd, Isor, Wilkins, Skinner, Simpson, Smathers and Williamson, backfield men; Block, Duncan, Davis, Morehead, Pough, Britt, Newby, Boles, Cheatham, Cherry, Newcomb, Beasley, Lipscomb, and Crinkley, linemen.

Mrs. Tucker Will Give Program on November 2nd

The Music Department has announced that Mrs. Cullingwood Tucker, Sewanee, Tenn., has been engaged for a program on Sunday afternoon, November 2nd, which is the second of the current series of Sunday afternoon concerts. Mrs. Tucker is a famous interpreter of the songs of the Old South, and the University is fortunate in being able to secure her services for one of these programs. At that particular time she will be on her way to New York to give her annual recitals there, and she is stopping over in Chapel Hill as the guest of friends here.

The Thirteenth Annual Safety Congress of the National Safety Council was held at Louisville, Ky., September 29 to October 3.

sistent with the proper conduct of government of today."

The question of oil was passed over lightly. "The Republican party has no defense for dishonesty in government today," the speaker declared. He stated that Mr. Coolidge, however, believes in honesty in government above anything else. He complimented Mr. Coolidge on his Cabinet appointments, declaring that the Teapot Dome episode had been inherited partly from the preceding administration and that it came to a head because individually corrupt men had happened to receive this oil legacy. The Republican party in no manner was responsible, he believed.

Mr. Brewster referred to the mill depression in North Carolina, stating that the South must come eventually to a protective tariff. If tariff for revenue only or free trade eventually prevails, he pictured Southern cotton mills being transferred to England, Germany, and China.

Maine's new governor-elect made an excellent impression upon the audience. He was an excellent speaker, with a conversational style of delivery that caused the audience to hear every word. He did not indulge in personalities as his Republican predecessor, Col. Isaac M. Meekins, did here last spring. He presented a great deal more for one to ponder over than did Colonel Meekins.

The shortness of his speech was appreciated, the address lasting exactly one hour. The speaker timed himself to the dot, often glancing down at a wrist watch on his left wrist.

The speaker was introduced by C. R. Jonas, well known University student, in an excellent introductory talk. Mr. Jonas referred to the old saying that "As Maine goes, so goes the nation," and because of Brewster's election in Maine, prophesied that the United States will go "hell-bent for Coolidge" in November.

Members of the audience desiring Mr. Brewster to mention the Ku Klux Klan were disappointed. The Klan was forgotten, although press dispatches indicate that he is a Klan candidate.

W. J. Coker, Jr., president of the student body, presided.

Speech correction classes, started in Cleveland's public schools in 1918, have been successful in eliminating speech defects of thousands of children, including both phonetic and stuttering cases. Nearly 2,500 children were enrolled in these classes during the past year.

A national educational exposition will be held in Florence, Italy, during the spring of 1925 under the auspices of the Ministries of Public Instruction and of National Economy, according to a communication from the Italian Embassy. American firms interested in the production of educational material are especially invited to participate in the exposition.

L. R. Wilson and Miss Cornelia Love, of the University library, are back from Asheville where they attended the Southeastern Librarian's conference last week. Mr. Wilson was elected president of the conference at this meeting.

Batters have been set for the women's building. Excavation will begin immediately and it is expected that the concrete foundation will be complete in about three weeks.

"Working Your Way" Made Feasible

Writing life insurance has enabled many a man to pay his way through college. It is a dignified calling and a true social service.

To induce your fellows to form habits of thrift—to obligate them to put by a little of their income—to safeguard them against future loss of earning power—is a form of effort that brings keen satisfaction as well as profit.

These are some of the reasons why the insurance business today is attracting the very best brains of America.

Write for the full particulars of plan whereby you can assist your self through college, and at the same time, prepare for a profitable and satisfactory business career.
