PARAGRAPHS

The Gamecock team was all Wright.

The sandy headed forward looks good for an all-South Atlantic.

"Well, we can't win all the time," advises the campus optimist.

Do you suppose the advocates of the Poole bill would consent to the insertion of an "h" just after the "P"?

We next look for some legislative body in the states to pass several amendments to the laws of gravity.

Rameses made his first appearance at a Carolina basketball game. His debut was applauded again and again by the enthusiastic student admirers of the dear old Tar Heel mascot.

The brilliant idea of Cheer Leader Huggins received a unanimous praise from the spectators. The stunt was pulled without any premonition on the part of the student body. It made a big hit.

The Valentine meeting of the Di and Phi societies tonight should be an interesting session. This is the first time to our knowledge that the two societies have ever met in joint session. Old alumni of the societies would probably violently oppose such a love feast.

J. W. Bailey seems to have gotten into a mell of a hess in his attacks on the Kluckers. We admire the courage and conviction of Mr. Bailey in carrying his fight against the Ku Klux Klan to the State. The wearers of the white sheet have yet to put something over on the Wake man.

An audience of ten people heard Dr. Robert Pretlow speak on the religious situation in Russia Thursday night. There were two students who attended the lecture. One of these took a good many notes on the lecture and appeared extremely interested in what the speaker was saying. This student was The TAR HEEL reporter.

But how could a lecturer expect to have a large crowd of students out to hear of religious conditions in Russia when basketball conditions in the South Atlantic division demanded that the student body lend its attention to the game with the South Carolina Gamecocks. It is getting so that there are two or three interesting happenings on the Hill every night. A man will have to choose the one he will attend.

THE UNIVERSITY'S POSITION ON EVOLUTION.

The University of North Carolina through its official head has taken a stand in regard to the teaching of evolution or evolutionary doctrines themselves. It is a stand, however, for the principles of freedom of thought which embodies the freedom of discussion and conclusion.

In his chapel talk yesterday morning, Dr. Chase clearly and concretely defined the University's position on evolution. It has expressed no opinion on evolution. It matters not to the University whether or not a student or teacher may or may not have his own convictions as to the truthfulness of the doctrine that man is linked in blood relationship with some lower form of life. The thing that the University is now opposing is the prohibiting of freedom of thought at which the Poole bill is aimed.

It is a matter of fact that many great and well respected men of our nation have expressed themselves believers in the evolutionary principles. It is also a matter of fact that, as Dr. Chase pointed out, no religious denomination or sect in the State has passed so drastic an action as the Poole bill would have.

The function of the University has been defined as two-fold. First it is to transmit the learning and knowledge of the past, and secondly, it is to contribute additions to learning. When limitations are placed upon the right of study and investigation and experimentation, then it is no longer the freedom of thought which we consider so important in our political and religious considerations. With this limitation on the field of experimentation the second function of the University would be the second function of the University would be materially handicapped in the biology and its related studies. Not only does the Poole bill remind one of the lists of prohibited books of the middle ages but it is directly in contrast with the spirit and in fact the letter of both the Constitution of the United States and that of the State.

We believe that the general average of the people including even many supposedly enthusiasts of education have jumped at the wrong conclusion in regard to the stand taken by the University. They have pictured the University as an out and out advocate of evolutionary principles and at the same time an enemy to those whose opinions on evolution may concur with Mr. William Jennings Bryan and other notorious and noted opponents of the hypothetical doctrine of evolutionary development. The University does not seek to prohibit the teaching of contrary doctrines to the evolutionary theory, and it likewise cannot take a stand to prohibit the teaching of evolution. It does take a decided stand for the freedom of thought and liberty of conscience that is so vital a part of our national principles of individual freedom and liberty.

10 PEOPLE MAKE UP HIS AUDIENCE

Dr. Pretlow Speaks on Russia and the Soviet Government to An Almost Empty House.

An audience of ten persons heard Dr. Robert Pretlow, director of relief work in Russia for the Quaker church, speak on the religious situation in Russia. Dr. Pretlow did not confine himself to the religious situation alone, but talked as well of political and social conditions.

One of the planks of the Soviet government is, he declared, that God has no place in the universe. No man of admitted religious belief can hold office in this government. To the Russian mind there is some reason for this, because the old Greek Catholic church was an instrument of terrible oppression. The priests became rich and the church tremendously wealthy while the people were poor and oppressed. The government subsidized the church in the old days.

In speaking of the Soviet government, he stated that there are many excellent things about it. It is doing more for health and education of the people than the old government ever did. There are other things about it that are not so good, however. It cannot by the wildest stretch of imagination be called a democracy. There are not more than 600,000 voters in the whole population.

The laws of Russia at present state that no religious instruction shall be given to persons under 18 years of age. Most of the people are still fundamentally religious, Dr. Pretlow declared. There is more liberty of religious belief than formerly. A new content has entered into religious belief through the work of the relief organizations. Religion was formerly only a bowing down to the icons, a thing of form and ceremony entirely apart from the everyday affairs of life. The relief workers have introduced a practical working Christianity. They have preached more by action than by words.

The Friends have the only relief organization that has continued on through all the revolutions up until the present. At first their work consisted of distributing food and maintaining hospitals. Later they were able to help the people in other ways. Practically all the horses in the famine districts had been killed in the times of distress. Recognizing the necessity for these animals for agriculture, some young men went over into Kurdistan where horses were plentiful and brought them back a distance of 1500 miles to sell at cost to the peasants. The success of the venture led dealers to undertake it and an industrial need was filled.

The Friends have also sent large quantities of quinine and other drugs to Russia and have held clinics through the afflicted regions. The soldiers had brought back tropical malarial fever from the south and it had spread over a large territory. Fifty cents' worth of quinine, Dr. Pretlow said, would make a man immune from the fever for a whole year.

Dr. Pretlow declared that the greatest needs of Russia today are a living social interpretation of Christianity and a better and more comprehensive educational system.
