PARAGRAPHS

Basketball champions again!
Atlanta scribes speak of the team as the "Tar Heel ghosts."

At any rate the other teams did not have a ghost of a chance to win the tournament.

We were not in the fortune-telling business several issues ago when we predicted that the Tar Heels would win.

Oh, no! It does not take a fortune-teller or a prophet to foretell such things. All one has to do is to gaze on the Carolina stars.

With exams only a few days off we expect to see the light bill of the University go up. If unshaven faces are signs of exam periods then can exams be far off?

THE TAR HEEL editor has been the recipient of several novel suggestions for editorial subjects. A mention of some will provoke a smile. Concerning the Small Number of Peanuts One Gets for Five Cents at the Pickwick. Concerning the Desires for Hot Water in the Quadrangle Buildings Between 5:30 and 6 O'clock.

SOUTHERN CHAMPS AGAIN

Well, the boys did come through just as we had predicted in our sheet of several issues back and win their third conference championship. The way that the Atlanta people regarded the Tar Heels is indeed interesting. Just before the final game Tulane was picked easily as the winner, but those "terrible Tarheels," as one sports writer called them, upset the dope bucket and won the game and the tournament championship. To show just what he thinks of the Carolina team, Morgan Blake placed three men on his mythical all-Conference team from the University of North Carolina.

The one thing that impressed spectators and bewildered opponents most was the manner in which the Tar Heel team could adapt itself to any style of play. If a five-man defense was needed, the Tar Heels had it. If it was a man-to-man system, the North Staters had it. They could make points from under the basket as well as from the middle of the court. It was basketball developed to a high degree of perfection.

Atlanta scribes wondered at the man-to-man defense of the Carolina team, and yet we know they use the five-man defense generally. They were able to change with such success as they did because they were first and foremost—basketball players de luxe. The final few minutes of the game when North Carolina scored six field goals to their opponent's one exemplified the basketball ability of the University players. Morgan Blake wrote of that final drive as follows: "There were five minutes left to play and Tulane was leading by two points, 26-24. Thereupon Captain Cobb, of Carolina, called time out, gathered his little flock around him in squatting positions on the floor, and they discussed the situation pro and con. We don't know what Cobb said to his men, but perhaps he read them letters from their sweethearts. Anyhow, they rose inspired, and with the ardor that caused Leander to swim the Hellespont, carried the fight so fast and fiercely to Tulane that in three minutes they had scored six field goals and were leading their opponents by ten points."

O. B. Keeler, also sports writer for the Atlanta Journal gives his version of the three minutes: "It was the test of championship—the crisis—the ultimate pinch, that calls on nerve and speed and skill and the long, long grind of careful training and self-denial; the pinch that demands much of the brain and more of the region back of the belt buckle."

That last solution is correct, for the Tar Heel team has just those things that are enumerated—nerve, speed, skill, training, brains and guts. The Carolina system is one which is grounded in the very fundamentals of the players. It is a system that comes from within, one which is learned only from within. If a foreign coach were to try to drive such basketball into a team it would be impossible, for no one can learn it unless the internal possibilities are there. The Tar Heels of the basketball teams of the past several years have gone beyond the point where outside coaching can mean much, for they learn by doing. Coach McDonald and his men are real basketball players, and have the fundamentals of basketball theory and basketball practice worked out from the bottom up.

It is no wonder that such a team can win championships. The praise of the student body should go for the hard work that the squad has expended in becoming of Southern Championship caliber.

CONCERNING THE NUMBER OF PEANUTS ONE GETS FOR FIVE CENTS AT THE PICKWICK

A real earnest request comes to us to write an editorial concerning the number of peanuts one gets for five cents at the Pickwick. As editor of the students' favorite semi-weekly we feel it our duty to the campus to write concerning the number of peanuts one gets for five cents at the Pickwick.

In order to get an insight into the number of peanuts one gets for five cents at the Pickwick, let us go back into history and consider the utility of the number of peanuts one gets for five cents at the Pickwick. But a trip to the famous Carolina peanut house will remove the necessity for such research, since one will quickly find out just what is done with the number of peanuts that one gets for five cents at the Pickwick. Instead of cracking the peanuts one gets for five cents at the Pickwick, they are used in attempts to crack the heads of the patrons of the Pickwick.

So we will now proceed with our editorial concerning the number of peanuts one gets for five cents at the Pickwick. We feel that one gets too many goobers for a nickel at the Pickwick. Although we have never had occasion to count the number of peanuts one gets for five cents at the Pickwick, yet our sensory organs (located in the back of our head) tells us that the number of peanuts that one gets for five cents at the Pickwick is too many.

We hope that our campus friend is satisfied now that we have written an editorial concerning the number of peanuts that one gets for five cents at the Pickwick.

Wants Picture Praying Tar Heels

Following the nation-wide circulation of Coach Monk McDonald's statement that the University's Southern Championship quint were in the habit of praying before entering its games, a telegram was received by the University News Bureau from the New York Times requesting a picture of the Tar Heels kneeling in prayer.

As the Carolina team is not in the market for sensational publicity such a picture was considered as unobtainable and a stock picture of the varsity squad was sent to the New York paper.

NEW BUS LAWS RAISE PROTESTS

Chapel Hill Buses Forced From Time-honored Stand.

ROUGH ON STRANGERS

Petitions Being Circulated for Modification of Law.

The new City of Durham traffic ordinances, which went into effect on March 1st, have drawn much fire from citizens of Chapel Hill and Durham. The ordinance provides that no public automobiles may park anywhere within the fire-limits of that city.

As a result the Chapel Hill buses have been driven from their regular stand in front of the Union Depot and are at present being forced to use a vacant lot back of the U. S. L. station as a starting point. The ordinance, it is believed, was aimed at the big buses that ply between Raleigh and Greensboro and which have proved sources of annoyance to traffic in both Durham and the Capital City. The Chapel Hill buses are mainly touring cars, or small buses which do not interfere with traffic, but unfortunately come under the sweeping law recently passed by the Durham city fathers.

Not only are Chapel Hill buses denied their time-honored right of parking on the wide street at the Union Depot but the drivers are prohibited from soliciting passengers. As it is now, strangers and students will experience hardships in getting out of Durham to the Hill.

Petitions have been circulating in Chapel Hill and Durham for modification of the ordinance in respect to the Chapel Hill buses. Among the Chapel Hill signers are the following names:

Charles T. Woollen, Chief George T. Featherstone, J. E. Gooch, Dr. W. de B. MacNider, G. H. Paulsen, Dr. R. B. Lawson, Dr. F. P. Venable, Archibald Henderson, Dr. James B. Bullitt and Dr. Isaac H. Manning.

CARRERE and HASTINGS Architects

"The New Architecture"

A DISTINCTLY new tendency is apparent in architectural thought and design today. Architects are designing in masses—the great silhouette, the profile of the building has become of far greater importance than its detail.

There is a new vigor and ruggedness even in buildings which are conventionally classic in their detail. Masses mount upward, supporting the tower, accentuating its height. The new architecture is treading toward great structures rather than multiplicity of detail.

Certainly modern invention—modern engineering skill and organization, will prove more than equal to the demands of the architecture of the future.
