PARAGRAPHS

It must be explained that the Frank Parker, tender age of three, who made his debut in the recent issue of the Buccaneer is not the editor of The Tar Heel but is, instead, a rank imposter.

The Lutherans have decided to build a church in Chapel Hill. And how tall are they to build their steeple?

Our vote goes to Winston-Salem as being the best town in the Old North State. Winston takes tobacco and gives us Camels, and Salem takes high school gals and gives us fine young ladies. Yes sir, we vote for the Twin City.

Favorite weekly saying of our favorite campus cynic: "Having seen the mid-term reports I am prepared to say that Co-Eds make A's where men students fear to tread."

Right now a portion of the state press is terribly stirred up over why so few college women marry. And this on top of our own co-ed leader's statement that 99% of the co-eds here are man-hunters. Must be a case of theory versus fact.

Our only regret is that Mr. Cardwell in his monthly campus bible didn't make a bigger bow to the faculty. We have all due reverence for the faculty, but a joke's a joke. The Buccaneer, through the medium of College Humor, has recently given nation-wide fame to one University professor.

And what's in a name? From a Southern college comes notice that a book from the joint pens of Howard Odum and Guy Johnson is a valuable addition to its library. Gerald Johnson is a name that smacks of literary genius but Guy Johnson gives us a movie of a blockheaded negro pugilist.

A state editor opines that college editors are an irresponsible lot. Wouldn't "collegiate" sum it up better? "Collegiate" covers a myriad of sins—radicalism, corn liquor, draw poker, necking parties, and victrola records.

THE CAMPUS CLEARING HOUSE

During the recent session of the North Carolina Collegiate Press Association, the editor of the Durham Herald, in making the opening speech, stated that he was more acquainted with this college newspaper than any other in the state. Later on he noted that a certain college paper had a tendency towards attacking the institution at which it was published, and by virtue of its position, to take advantage of the school.

Being a close follower of the other college papers in the state and having been guilty of directing several feeble editorials at this, our Alma Mater (which we believe is about as harmless a sport as tossing empty peanut shells against the hide of an elephant) the Editor of the TAR HEEL became possessed with more than a sneaking feeling that he was the guilty culprit.

Now for the second time this year we hasten to our own defense. If a citizen and newspaperman who lives away from the University thinks the TAR HEEL tends towards radicalism or yellow journalism, just what does the official staff of the institution think of this blatant organ?

The University of North Carolina is to our firm belief the most liberal University in the South and one of the very few liberal institutions in the nation. Consequently the TAR HEEL has for years enjoyed a freedom that few college papers enjoy. And speaking for the past as well as the present, it is our belief that the editors of the TAR HEEL have realized the trust placed in them and have honorably measured up to it.

But the faculty and the official staff of the University are one, and the student body is another. The TAR HEEL is the most consistent and practical connecting link between these two groups. Last year a history professor, high in his department and high in the faculty, happened to notice, while passing by Steele Dormitory, the great number of beds that the University keeps in the basement of that building to accommodate its visitors. Upon reaching his class the doctor inquired if the dormitories were actually so crowded that such herding together of students had become necessary, and expressed the earnest opinion "that matters were indeed serious if they had come to such a state as that."

The professors know little of the living and working conditions of the students. Having packed their brief cases in the afternoon, they withdraw from the campus until morning calls them back. With the official University and the Student body so widely separated a go-between is necessary. This duty, unpleasant though it may be, falls to the lot of the TAR HEEL.

Consequently when the student newspaper rises to heights of mild bitterness, or weak sarcasm, or even attempts bravado, radicalism or insubordination shouldn't be smelt. The TAR HEEL is duly enough pro-administration but it is also pro-student.

ALL'S LOVELY.

Their majesties, North Carolina State College and University of North Carolina, have smoked the pipe of peace and have kindly consented to play at football next fall for the edification and enjoyment of as many howling football fans as care to journey to Chapel Hill on October 31.

Since the two institutions have signed the agreement, the new arrangement must be satisfactory to both parties. Students and alumni at both institutions are glad oil has been poured upon the troubled waters.

The compromise date will not greatly affect the University's graduated schedule. Perhaps this later date will bring it about that at least an occasional Carolina-State game will be played on a day that is not torridly hot.

Miss Louise Hunter of Charlotte, Mr. E. M. Vance of Greenville, S. C., and Mr. J. D. Hood of Washington, D. C., were the week-end guests of Miss Sarah Hunter.

OUTLOOK FOR FALL DANCES FAVORABLE

Problem of Securing Girls May Be Increased, However, by Competition of V. M. I. and W. & L.

The date set for the fall dances is fast approaching. The outlook, so far as the orchestra and management of the dances are considered, is very favorable. The one factor which is dubious appears to be, however, the most essential part of a successful set of dances—a copious number of attractive girls. Carolina students were fortunate in securing a monopoly on girls for the week-end of the Davidson game. Such will not be the case on the Friday and Saturday following Thanksgiving. Competition will be offered by such institutions as V. M. I. and W. & L., which are justly famous for their excellent dances. It is not entirely without reason that many girls often prefer attending dances at these institutions to those given on the Hill. Following the major event of the evening at the above enumerated colleges, the merry-makers adjourn to private parties and mid-night luncheons.

Despite handicaps, there is an opportunity for members of the campus social set to persuade fair maids to grace the floor of Swain Hall on the Friday and Saturday following Thanksgiving. Durham will be flooded with girls during the initial days of the approaching week. The occasion will be a series of dances at the Washington Duke Hotel with Tal Henry's musicians vying their strains against those of Weidemeyer. Many girls also will journey to the town of Bull to be present at the marriage of Matilda Bryant and Bob George, an alumnus of the University and member of the D. K. E. Fraternity. It merely remains for Carolina students to persuade the girls to lengthen their stay in the Tar Heel state.

It will be impossible for the usual assortment of Sweet Briar girls to attend the dances, as inconvenient classes loom as detaining obstacles.

Gerald Johnson Cited As Southern Literary Leader

Allan Tate, formerly editor of The Fugitive, which was a magazine of Southern literary expression published in Nashville, Tennessee, has contributed an article entitled "The Last Days of the Charming Lady" to the current number of The Nation. This article has for its theme the present state of literary consciousness in the South and points to Gerald Johnson, head of the University school of journalism, as one of those who is doing much to make the South recognized and respected in this field by the power and observation of his critical writings. For Mr. Tate the "Charming Lady" represents the influence that has done its ridiculous best to cherish a single social standard above all else and by doing so has choked out creative effort by its political aristocracy. Mr. Johnson is of the newer school of Southern writers which is diverging from beaten paths and following ways of their own choice which can lead only to glory both for them and for the states of their birth. The University should be proud to have a man on its faculty who is attracting national attention by his efforts to put the South back on its literary feet.

Students claim that another pickpocket in the person of a gentleman from "up North" was at work in the crowd. His procedure was slightly different. Selling peanuts was his hobby and each time he sold a bag, he extracted an extra nickel from those students willing to pay it. Some students commented on the irony of paying a dime for a couple of ounces of peanuts when their father received only a couple of cents for a whole pound of them only a comparatively few miles from Chapel Hill.

Plans were made to charter a special bus to carry the members to Fayetteville for the Thanksgiving holidays. Another matter that was up for a good deal of discussion was the question of the annual Christmas celebration given by the club. Five different proposals were brought forward, but none could be definitely decided upon. A committee has been appointed to find out if the opportunities for giving a dance in Fayetteville will be satisfactory. The committee will go to Fayetteville during the next week-end to see if arrangements can be made and report at a call meeting to be held next Monday. All students from Fayetteville are urged to be present at this meeting. It is hoped that the ladies will attend and give their support to the Christmas entertainment.

The Playmaker Reading which was scheduled for Sunday night has been indefinitely postponed on account of the Playmaker dedication performances which begin Monday. Professor Howard Mumford Jones was to present Oscar Wilde's Importance of Being Ernest.

Dr. Howard W. Odum, director of the School of Public Welfare, left last night for Baltimore and Annapolis, Md. At Annapolis he will make a talk before the Maryland Conference of Social Work. The subject of his talk will be "A Public Welfare Program for the Rural Community."
