IS IT WORTH IT?

At this time the question of going to college is confronting every graduate of the high schools and others who are prepared to enter an institution of higher learning. The question of whether it is worth while, the money and time that will be spent in college now looms in the prospective college student's mind.

There are those who will tell one that college is a waste of time—a four-year loaf—and the breeding place for all the devilment under the sun. However, we believe that the high school graduate had best listen to what those who know have to say about it. J. B. Duke, endower of the Duke University, describing an education as “a personal satisfaction,” said that if he had his days to live over again he “would attend college for four years and hope to get as much as the average present-day graduate receives from his four years experience.”

Making a man broader in vision and outlook, creating a greater field for future service, and making one more powerful by supplying knowledge, which is power itself—these and more are the results of a college education.

The United States board of education estimates that, in the matter of financial earning capacity alone, a college education is worth $150,000 to the average man. This means that college prepares him to earn, according to the average, $150,000 more than the average man can without college training.

When you are considering what to do, ask the man who has been to college or can appreciate one, for sound advice.

YOUR UNIVERSITY

As your own high school or streets is, or are, the property of you and yours, so is the University of North Carolina. Created, operated and financed by the people of the state, the University is doing all it can with its resources and equipment to serve those to whom it belongs.

Carolina is not endowed by the monies of a single or small group of individuals. Nor is it controlled by a sectarian organization. The University of North Carolina is endowed by over two and a half million people and by their wealth which far exceeds a billion dollars. Could an institution be richer.

As a public servant to the people of the state, the work of the University can daily be seen. The mental examinations which are given to high school students are prepared by a department of the institution at Chapel Hill. Your teachers are probably products of the school of education here. Any citizen may take a university course by correspondence or by extension instruction if he desires and meets the requirements. These are but a few citations to show how closely linked the university is with the people of North Carolina.

With a background of 139 years, rich in humor and traditional triumphs, the University of North Carolina now stands out as one of the leading universities of the country—the leader long recognized in the south.

He who chooses Carolina for his institution of higher learning will choose well.

MOST SUCCESSFUL SUMMER SESSION NEARS CLOSE

Next Tuesday the most successful summer school in the history of the institution will come to a close. Dean N. W. Walker, Director of Summer School, and other administrative officials voice the opinion that this has been the best summer session from the standpoint of quality of students, general scholarship, strength of faculty and the lack of necessity of disciplinary action. Dean Walker states:

“The Summer School session of 1927, now coming to a close, has established several records worthy of notice.

“In the first place the quality of the student body is better than ever before. As evidence of this fact, the records show that 32.8 per cent. hold college degrees; last year only 25.6 per cent. held degrees. Further, the summer school students this year have been very studious, according to reports from instructors. The library records add proof to this statement; parallel reading books have been very much in demand. In the number enrolled, this session has also set a record. During the two terms 2,544 students were enrolled, the enrollment last year being 2,323. The number of students in the graduate school this session was 485 compared with 344 last year. The Administrative Board reports fewer cases of discipline than have been reported in any previous session.

“In every particular the affairs of the Summer School have been administered with but little friction. We feel safe in stating that this has been the most successful session in spite of the enviable records made in past years.”

The time has now come, to paraphrase President Harry W. Chase's opening exercise address, when the University should choose men of outstanding merit with national reputation for the various departments of instruction for the summer school. In short, the University of North Carolina summer school should not only be the best in the south, but should rank at the top of the summer sessions of the various leading Universities in the United States.

Playmakers Produce Two One-Act Pieces With Great Success

The Carolina Playmakers, overcoming handicaps arising due to the absence of Hubert Heffner, director, and the inexperience of the casts, played up to the high standard set by the Playmakers in the past, when they presented The Scuffletown Outlaws and In Dixon's Kitchen before the University Summer School here last week.

The lion's share of honor for the success of the performance goes to William Norment Cox, of Rowland, author, star, and director of The Scuffletown Outlaws.

FREE TUITION IS AVAILABLE IN THE EDUCATION SCHOOL

Teachers and Those Planning To Teach Can Benefit By State Exemption—Walker Explains.

In addition to the hundred or more scholarships which are annually awarded, giving free tuition in the University to the recipients, exemption from the payment of tuition may be realized by those who have taught school in the state for a certain period of time and by those who are going to teach. Dean N. W. Walker, of the School of Education, sets forth the conditions under which a student may avail himself, or herself, of free tuition when registered in that school. The statement of Dean Walker follows:

“The State of North Carolina offers free tuition to students in the University who have taught in the schools of North Carolina for as long as two years. It offers free tuition also to students who are preparing to teach in North Carolina. Undergraduates in the University who avail themselves of the tuition exemption under this provision are required, under a resolution of the trustees, to register in the School of Education. The School of Education is that division of the University whose major purpose is to prepare young men and young women for teaching and for other forms of educational service. Undergraduates registered in the School of Education pursue the same academic courses in the various departments of the University that the students in the other schools pursue, but their programs of work are administered by the School of Education officials.

“The curricula of the School of Education are designed to give students a sound general academic training such as may be secured in any good college of arts and sciences and in addition thereto it gives the professional courses in education and related subjects that are required of teachers for certification to teach in the better schools of the State. Students in this school are given an opportunity to begin their specialization, while undergraduates, in any of the academic departments in which they show ability and have an interest. The baccalaureate degree to which the curricula in the School of Education leads is that of A.B. in Education. Graduates of the School of Education, then, have a good general academic training plus the professional training required for teaching in the best schools of this State. Those who wish to pursue graduate work are, on graduation, prepared to enter any of the leading graduate schools to begin their graduate studies in any one of three fields of learning.

“High school graduates entering the University this fall who expect to avail themselves of the free tuition privilege extended to those intending to teach must make all arrangements for this exemption before registering in September. Full particulars may be had on application to the Dean of the School of Education.

fast into the concrete. The wooden seats are half the width of the concrete steps, so that every spectator will have ample room for his feet behind the person in front of him.

It is hard for one, unused to the huge football stadia that fill the northern and western sections of the country, to visualize the actual size of the new Kenan Stadium. The fact that it will seat 24,000 people seems beyond comprehension to many people of the state. The two concrete stands on the present Emerson Field hold only 4,000 people, and yet one section of the new stands will seat three times that many.

The Stadium is to be dedicated at the Carolina-Virginia game Thanksgiving.
