Carolina Wins Second Game of Series from Virginia by 6-4 Score

Tar Heels and Cavaliers Play Third Game of Annual Series in Memorial Stadium at Greensboro This Afternoon.

Carolina pulled a hard fought game out of the fire with a thrilling eighth inning rally here yesterday, and the Virginia Cavaliers took their second straight defeat of the season, 6-0, at the hands of the Tar Heels. Terfield and Barnhart told the story in the 8th frame, while Jim Ball, the Tar Heels' fourth pitcher of the day, held the Cavaliers in the check in the final frame.

The game gave Carolina a chance for a clean sweep in the annual series, which has been played now since 1891. The final game will be staged in Greensboro's Memorial Stadium this afternoon at 3 o'clock, and a record and colorful crowd is expected to be on hand.

ANDERSON TAKES CITY EDITOR JOB

One-Time Campus Comic Editor and News Writer to Assume New Duties Thursday.

Andy Anderson whose initials are W. W. has resigned his position with the Durham Sun, one of the Page chain, as proofreader and feature writer to take the city editorship of the Albemarle Press.

Before going to the Sun he was head proofreader at the Seeman Printery of Durham but tiring of reading book proof and wanting to get his fingers again on a typewriter he went to the Durham paper to begin his chosen profession.

While on the campus he majored in journalism and was the most representative man in his class of '28 and that same year saw him issue as editor the best volume of the Buccaneer since its beginning. He was two times feature editor of the Yackety Yack, a constant contributor to the Magazine for two years and while in Durham he has contributed to the Magazine and the Duke Archive. He was on the staff of the ill-fated Faun and has served on the Tar Heel as reporter, feature writer, columnist and literary critic and frequently assisted in desk work when necessary. In his senior year he was proof reader at the Orange Print Shop.

The Albemarle Press has the reputation of being the best typographically appearing weekly in North Carolina and it is probably the largest. It will be enlarged in the next two months when the plant is moved into new and larger quarters.

Andy is on the campus this week-end taking a rest he says before going to Albemarle. He starts work in his new position the 16th of this month.

City Editor

W. W. Anderson, University alumnus, has accepted a position with the Albemarle Press as city editor. He will assume his new duties next week.

Yackety Yacks Monday

Guy Hill, business manager of the Yackety Yack, announces that copies of it will be distributed Monday afternoon at three o'clock from the Yackety Yack offices in the basement of Alumni. All students whose names begin with a letter from A through L will form a line at the window to the office, others will receive their copies at the door.

Special Train To Leave at 9 O'clock

The special train chartered to carry the North Carolina student body to Greensboro for the annual diamond classic with Virginia leaves Chapel Hill at nine o'clock this morning, Saturday, and is scheduled to arrive at its destination before noon. The train will leave Greensboro at 11:55 o'clock tonight. Excursion rates will make it possible for practically all University students to follow the team and cheer it on in this annual classic with the Cavaliers. Upon the arrival of the pilgrimage in Greensboro, a parade will be formed up Elm Street led by the cheer leaders and the forty-piece University band.

Playmakers Install New Plans for Next Year for Customers

Due to the growth of the interest in Playmaker work plans are being laid for the presentation of all Playmaker offerings three times next year instead of two. Season tickets will be sold in coupon books, like the athletic membership, so that the holders of season tickets will be assured of a reserve seat. At present Hubert Heffner, business manager of the organization, reports that he has enough requests for tickets next year to fill the house two nights.

Two outside attractions will be offered instead of one, if present plans materialize. Negotiations are underway for an appearance of the Dallas little theatre here. This is the most famous little theatre in the country being noted for its art work.

There is a strong possibility of the Morning Height players of New York giving a production of John Erskine's "Private Life of Helen of Troy." Mr. Erskine has just finished the dramatic version of his play; this group is bidding strongly for the dramatic rights.

SCENERY FOR RIP VERY ELABORATE SAYS SAM SELDEN

Will Be Presented in Forest Theatre May 24 and 25; Prof. Koch is Directing Play.

With rehearsals on Rip Van Winkle going steadily forward the Playmakers are making elaborate plans for the presentation of the play in the Forest Theatre May 24 and 25. Sam Selden is at work on stage sets and lighting effects while Hubert Heffner is polishing up his part in the title role. The first two acts are completed; next week will see the last two acts finished, and the following week will be taken up with the polishing touches on the play.

Faced with the problem of shifting a large amount of scenery quickly before the eyes of the audience as there is no curtain on the Forest theatre, Sam Selden is working steadily on the sets. Just how the changes can be made quickly without the audience seeing the stage hands has not been worked out completely; some are suggesting that the Chinese convention of the property man dressed in black be followed.

Two exterior scenes, one showing a Dutch colonial village with the Inn and Rip's home, the other a mountain scene, are being designed. The sets will be in miniature, suggestive rather than realistic. The two interior scenes are the homes of Rip, a dilapidated cabin, and of Deerick von Beekbanon, the wealthy Shylock of the village.

Professor Koch is directing the play. The part of Meenie, a little girl, will be taken in the first act by Eleanor Jones, in the second by Anne Bagby, and in the last two acts by either Miss Faulkner or Miss Edwards, who are both rehearsing.

Men Are Taken from Every Phase of College Life; Gardner Tapped First

GIVES INTERESTING TALK

North Carolina Governor Laments Mass Production Situation; Hopes to Remedy It.

"If I were called upon to characterize in a single sentence the supreme need of this State today, I should unhesitatingly say that the thing most needed, in all our departments of life, is a fundamental change in emphasis," declared Governor O. Max Gardner, Thursday night to a crowd that filled Memorial Hall for the impressive "tap day" ceremony of the Golden Fleece, University honor society.

"In our restless and almost relentless pursuit of the shadow of material gain, we have lost sight of the substance of all human happiness and well being, which is equality of opportunity," he continued.

"The evil of industry in North Carolina is that industry in the State has gone in for quantity production rather than for quality.

"If I had the power, I would not permit the building of a single new spindle or new loom during my term of office as Governor. The rapid growth of North Carolina industry has brought with it the by-products, of congestion, fermentation and discontent. You can never pay wages above the bare necessities of life as long as everything is based on mass production without regard for quality production which requires skilled labor.

"The biggest problem in North Carolina today is the human problem and the thing that disturbs me more as Governor than anything else is my duty to aid in the solution of that great question."

After discussing the educational phases of the State's life, the Governor said:

"In agriculture and industry the challenge to our leadership is no less unmistakable or compelling. I have preferred to concentrate my administration on agriculture, but the rapid change of North Carolina from an agricultural to an industrial community brings with it what I have already alluded to as the great problem of all government—the human problem. It is my belief that human and social implications of mass production must become increasing public concern. For the life of the average man is an exact barometer of the life of the State and if North Carolina is to be and remain a fit place for you and me to live in, it must be and remain a fit place for all of us to live in. No progress that does not lift all can ever permanently lift any."

Declaring that the ceremony of picking honor men from the body of the University was of something more than campus significance, the Governor told the students before him that they had come upon the scene when North Carolina stands spiritually at the cross-roads.

State at Cross-roads. Asserting that days are ahead when the State will need leaders as never before, he said:

"The great leader is one who can use power without abusing it. A man's loyalties are a sure index of his character."

Davidson Took the Lead In County Manager Plan

By DR. PAUL W. WAGER

Editorial Note: This is the second of a series of Sunday articles on county government in North Carolina that are being prepared by Dr. Paul W. Wager of the University Department of Rural-Social Economics who has devoted considerable time to the subject and is regarded as an authority.

These articles will deal with definite improvements which have been made in organization of county government, and with the excellent work of certain county officials. They will show how successfully the county government law of 1927 has been applied in certain communities.

In the election of November, 1928, the other party came into power in Davidson county, and the new board felt that the management should be changed accordingly. In fact, it is doubtful if the former manager would have consented to continue in office under the new board. This attitude on the part of the board and the retiring manager reveals a mistaken conception of the county manager plan. Its fundamental principle is to lift purely administrative functions out of party politics.

It is not surprising, however, that the new concept should be slow in taking root. The city manager has not yet been entirely divorced from party politics, and it will probably take longer to overcome the traditional attitudes toward public office

PROUTY TALKS TO ROTARIANS

Speaks on the Rocks of North Carolina and Where They Are Found.

As a feature on the program of the Chapel Hill Rotary Club at its regular meeting and banquet last Wednesday evening in the ball room of the Carolina Inn, Dr. W. F. Prouty, of the University Geology department, gave a lecture on "The Rocks of North Carolina and Where they are found."

"North Carolina is physiographically divided into three parts. We have the coastal plain, the piedmont section, and the mountain area. Beneath all of the state however there is a certain fundamental base of rock that is the same in all parts. If one would bore about two thousand feet down in the earth at Wilmington one would find crystalline rock, the same that one would find if he bored down far enough right here in Chapel Hill. Below this strata of crystalline rock, one finds granite. This granite is enclosed by very old rocks which contain mica. The old rock sections in the western part of the state always have a very high mineralization. Near Virginia, for instance, there was at one time quite an extensive mining district. The marble belt up near Marion and Mercury in this state, which contains nothing more than highly treated limestone is now being rapidly developed."

In conclusion, Dr. Prouty told some things regarding the pre-Cambrian period in which the ocean came up as far as the place in which Raleigh is now located. Proof of this is offered by the recent uncovering of whale bones in Tarboro recently, to which Dr. Prouty carried several of his students to demonstrate his statements.

Dr. Prouty was introduced by T. Smith McCorkle, of the University Music department, and member of the program committee of the local Rotary organization.

Ten men were selected at the 27th annual tapping of the Golden Fleece Thursday night in Memorial hall. O. Max Gardner, alumnus of the University, delivered the address of the evening, while Mr. R. B. House, Executive Secretary of the University and a member of the Golden Fleece, read the legend of the Fleece.

In the selection of those to be honored the Fleece selected a representative group, choosing men from almost every phase of student life.

Upon the conclusion of Mr. House's reading two hooded figures entered the hall through side entrances. Stalking through aisles of the hall they conferred with Frazier Glenn at the rear of the hall before beginning the tapping. Walking together down the center aisle the two figures approached the platform. The crowd remembering the tapping last spring wondered who was to receive the telegram announcing their tapping. Suddenly one of the men pounced upon Governor Gardner. Somewhat bewildered by the demonstration he stood while the audience applauded.

Following the tapping of the Governor the figures again retired to the rear of the building. After another conference they began to circle the hall again. Suddenly one of them pounced upon Ray Farris. Gordon
