

Local Radio Men Operate Own Broadcasting Station on Campus

Smiley, Rose, and Griffin Operate Station as Part of Naval Communication Reserve.

Although many of the features of the University have had quite a bit of publicity, there remains one that is relatively well known to radio amateurs but which has had little or no press notice. The reference is to amateur radio station, W4WE, which has been in communication with stations in all the continents and in 50 countries. The station, which is operated by T. B. Smiley, instructor in electrical engineering, and George Rose and T. Griffin, graduate students, has carried on two way communications from latitude 65 degrees north to latitude 79 degrees south and all the way around the world. This includes the majority of the earth's surface, and the only reason there has been no exchange of messages with stations in the rest of the world is that there are no stations there.

Not only is the station known because of its activities in long distance work, but it is also one of the few stations which operate on all of the amateur wave bands. The station has a license from the Federal Radio Commission, which gives it permission to work the bands of 160, 80, 40 20, and 10 meters wave length.

The station is a part of the Naval Communication Reserve, and Mr. Smiley holds the rank of Lieutenant in the Naval Reserve. This reserve was created by the government to serve the nation during time of war. Mr. Smiley has charge of the fifth section of the fifth district, which includes North Carolina, in which there are four station members of the Radio reserve.

Last winter the Radio Corporation of America gave the University station a 200 watt transmitter and a generator to operate the set. This transmitter has an arrangement whereby the wave length can be instantly changed to any of four different ones by turning a lever. It is also so arranged that it can be used as a C. W., an A. C. W., or a telephonic transmitter.

The latest addition to the station is a television set, built by T. Griffin, one of the operators. With the set it is sometimes possible to see the images of the people at the broadcasting station. As yet the set has not been very successful, but when one considers that television is still in its infancy, such as radio was 20 years ago, expected.

extremely successful results cannot be Mr. Smiley stated that in its present form television will never be a success, but that probably someone would discover a radical change which will make it practical. As an example of this same thing he cited the invention of the vacuum tube, which revolutionized radio and made the present-day sets possible.

Murchison Receives Aid From Science Council

C. T. Murchinson, professor of economics in the School of Economics and Commerce, who has received a grant-of-aid from the Social Science Research Council and the Institute for Social Research, will spend the summer in New England doing research work on the reason for the decline of the textile industry in New England.

The Social Science Research Council is an organization supported by several wealthy people for the promotion of research in problems of social science, and the Institute of Social Research, is an organization at the University with practically the same purpose as that of the Research Council.

DANCE COMMITTEE SUSPENDS THREE ORGANIZATIONS

Executive Committee of German Club Takes Action Against Student Organizations for Not Reporting.

At the Tuesday night meeting of the executive committee of the German Club following a week-end of unusual social activity on the Hill, a regrettable number of cases involving breaches of German Club decorum were handled.

Due to the failure of its dance committee to report to the German Club officials, the Acacia fraternity was forbidden to sponsor any social functions during the next school year.

The committees of the Senior Dance and the Triangular Prep School Dance have been suspended until a proper report of their functions have been made.

In the case of individuals under the influence of intoxicants, four were suspended until January 1, 1930; three were suspended until the spring quarter of 1930; and one through the final dances of 1930. These suspensions are inclusive of all dances given in Chapel Hill.

FORDHAM LEADS YOUNG LAWYERS

Greensboro Student Wins Scholarship and Law Review Prize.

Jefferson B. Fordham, of Greensboro, a senior in the Law School, led all comers at the Law School Association dinner, held Saturday night at the Carolina Inn, when he was awarded a certificate in recognition of his work as student editor-in-chief of the North Carolina Law Review during the past year; was granted the George Watts Hill prize of fifty dollars for the best consistent work by any of the student editors upon the current volume; and was elected to the national honorary law-school society of the Order of the Coif, along with Miss Susie Sharp, of Reidsville, for having led the present senior class, in scholarship, throughout the three-year course. Two days previously, Fordham had been notified of his appointment to a Sterling Fellowship at the Yale Law School, for next year, at a stipend of $1,400. He will go to Yale in October to do research in commercial law.

Chief Justice W. P. Stacy, of the State Supreme Court, was elected to honorary membership in the Order of the Coif, the first to receive that award from the North Carolina Chapter, because of the distinction he has attained upon the bench.

The Phi Delta Phi prize of a set of North Carolina statutes, given annually for the best single student contribution to the Law Review during the current year, was presented to Henry Brandis, Jr., of Salisbury, a second-year student and assistant-editor.

Allen K. Smith of Raleigh, was announced as the faculty's choice for student editor-in-chief of the Law Review for 1929-30, and John Anderson and J. H. Chadbourne, as assistant editors. These appointments are made upon the combined bases of scholarship, demonstrated ability to write, and capacity for handling the student staff.

The winners of the first-year competition for membership on the Law Review staff for next year, out of eighteen who entered, were named as follows: P. B. Abbott, Jr., L. W. Armstrong, Moore Bryson, J. H. Chadbourne, W. S. Jenkins, H. B. Parker, C. E. Reitzel, Y. M. Smith, T. W. Sprinkle, T. A. Uzzell, and J. A. Williams.

The following received certificates of membership on the Law Review staff during the current year: J. B. Fordham, editor; Henry Brandis, assistant; and J. H. Anderson, J. W. Crew, D. M. Field, A. W. Gholson, J. F. Glenn, Walter Hoyle, J. B. Lewis, A. C. McIntosh, C. S. Mangum, Jr., A. B. Raymer, Harry Rockwell, C. F. Rouse, A. K. Smith, J. N. Smith, N. S. Sowers, and L. H. Wallace.

These awards, honors and prizes came late on a program mainly devoted to an address by Justice W. J. Brogden, of the Supreme Court, and

RUSSELL FAVORS ADULT EDUCATION

President of Association for Adult Education Speaks Tuesday to Meeting.

The greatest opportunity for education today "lies in the improvement of workers for service through adult education," James E. Russell, Dean Emeritus of Teachers College, Columbia University, and president of the American Association for Adult Education, declared here tonight in his presidential address at the fourth annual meeting of the Association at the Carolina Inn.

"The Great Decisions of life," the speaker said, "come long after school days. The mode of dress we wear, the kind of foods we eat, the type of house and home we live in, the way we earn our living, the use we make of leisure, the choice of friends, the religion we profess, the political duties we assume—the whole round of daily life is one everlasting struggle between lower and higher, or better and worse in the realm of morals of economics."

All this is the field of adult education. It is occupied by pulpit and platform, press and stage, school and vocation, but still there is no noticeable overcrowding of wholesome educational undertakings.

"Peace and contentment are social rewards to those who habitually choose to follow intelligent leadership, while prosperity accrues to all from the creative development of expert service. Then, why stop learning?" he asked in an eloquent plea for adult education.

"Our problem," Dean Russell declared, "is how to train leaders and followers in one and the same institution; how secure that docility and contentment with one's lot in life so necessary to that maintenance of civil order and social well-being, and at the same time develop that righteous discontent with things as they are which leads to new vistas of being."

American education, he found, is unique in that it is education "of the people, by the people," to an extreme to which no other nation goes. Whatever its faults, it has done one thing well: "It has developed initiative in American youth." But leadership is not aristocratic nor limited with us. It is open to all, and there is such opportunity for everyone to be a leader in some field that there is little difference between training to follow and training to lead.

"Leaders and followers, therefore, are scions grafted on the same stock. Any person may be at once both, or either, or neither, according to his native endowments and the use which he makes of his talents." There is no paradox, Dean Russell said; schools can train leaders and followers at the same time.

He declared that "a living wage and the possession of property are the foundations on which conservative citizenship rests" and expressed the opinion that the loss of the individual worker's identity as a worker and the loss of desire for independent ownership of productive property was "the greatest danger to American democracy."

Frosh Speech Series Will Be Given Each Year Says Bradshaw

The last two of the series of talks by faculty members on the general topic of "Understanding Contemporary North Carolina History" will be given next Monday and Tuesday when Dr. E. W. Knight will speak on "Education," and Dean D. D. Carroll, of the School of Economics and Commerce will deliver a lecture on "Industrial Leadership."

The series this spring has included talks on "The Workmen's Compensation Act" by Professor Frank Graham, "North Carolina History" by Professor R. D. W. Connor, "Democratic Institutions in North Carolina" by R. B. House, and "Literature of North Carolina" by Dean Addison Hibbard.

Dean Bradshaw, who has had charge of this series of talks, said yesterday that they will be repeated each spring, in an effort to acquaint the freshmen with the state in which they live.

Alfred E. Smith is to write the story of his life for The Saturday Evening Post. We hope he charges the Post enough to get some compensation for what it did to him in the last campaign.

First Presentation of "Rip Van Winkle" To Be Given Tomorrow Night by Carolina Playmakers

Awards Night

Ray Farris, President of the Student Body, announces that the annual Awards Night Exercises of the University will be held in Memorial Hall on Monday, May 27th, at 8:30 P. M. Arrangements are under way to procure an influential State figure to speak for the occasion.

Awards Night at the University marks the culmination of reward in all fields of student extra-curricular activity, when monogram certificates are awarded to varsity athletes and charms are given to board members of campus publications and similar student organizations.

SENATORS ELECT WILLIAMS PRES.

New Officers for Next Year Picked at Meeting of Di Tuesday Night.

The meeting of the Dialectic Senate Tuesday night was the last of the quarter. According to constitutional provisions this was strictly an executive session. Immediately upon being called to order by the retiring president, John Norwood, the senate proceeded to the selection of officers for the fall quarter of next year.

For the position of president the choice of the senate fell upon Senator J. C. Williams, who had served previously in the capacity of clerk and president-pro-tem. Williams is a member of the rising senior class.

Senator Garland McPherson, the retiring treasurer, was elevated to the office of president-pro-tem. McPherson has also served as clerk of the senate.

For the position of clerk the senate cast its choice for Senator T. B. Rector. This is the first time that he has been chosen to represent the senate in official capacity.

After considerable deliberation on the part of rival factions Senator G. A. Kincaid secured the office of critic over his opponent.

In the final balloting Senator Marcus Simpson defeated his opponent for the office of sergeant-at-arms.

H. N. Patterson was elected at an earlier meeting to serve the senate all of next year in the capacity of treasurer. Patterson succeeds Garland McPherson—both men being from High Point.

The new officers will be formally inaugurated at the first meeting of the quarter next fall. The inauguration ceremonies will be conducted by either the present president of the senate, or the highest ex-official of the senate present.

School of Religion Holds Last Meeting

The School of Religion which is being headed by Parson W. D. Moss, during the winter and spring quarters, held its last meeting of the year at the Methodist church last night.

Parson Moss, who has been speaking during the past two quarters on the subject, "The Story of Religion," last night answered the question, "What is Christianity?"

The School of Religion of Chapel Hill was organized three years ago by the various churches in the town and the University Y. M. C. A. For two years the school was headed by a full-time professor, but this year courses have been offered by different Chapel Hill ministers.

This year the School of Religion brought Dr. W. L. Poteat, president emeritus of Wake Forest College, to speak, in a series of lectures on "Christian Ethics." The lectures included three talks, "Social Aims of Jesus," "In Search of a Moral Dynamic," and "Regeneration of the Social Order." These three talks have recently appeared in book form.

Correct this sentence: "I'm not conceited," said he, "but I want my child to act and believe as I do."

Last Production of Year to Be Given in Open Air Theatre of Playmakers; Heffner to Take Lead.

With rehearsals going steadily forward, the scenery being completed by Sam Selden and his workers, everything is taking final shape for the presentation of "Rip Van Winkle" in the Forest Theatre Friday and Saturday nights by the Carolina Playmakers. The University Faculty Orchestra is tuning up to furnish music at the performance. With the weather man promising fair weather the show bids fair to draw a large crowd. This is the last performance of the Playmakers for the season.

Hubert Heffner will play the lead of the whimsical old Dutchman, the role that Joseph Jefferson created and made famous while he played it for three generations of American theatre-goers. Miss Nettina Strobach will play the feminine lead, the part of Rip's wife. "History" Brandon will do Deerick Von Beekman, Pendleton Harrison will play Nicholas Vedder, Lawrence Thompson and Charles Wilbrandt with alternate in the role of Hendrick; Al Kahn is Cockles, Cyrus Edson does Seth Slough, Nelson Howard is Jacob Stein, Miss Eleanor Jones and Nell Edwards will play Meenie jointly; Ethel Good in the role of Kitchen completes the cast.

During the rainy weather the first part of the week the cast rehearsed in the Tin Can while the boxers punching the bag and the basketball players practicing furnished a little interference in the way of noise. The cast has worked hard and steadily, is well trained, and promises to present a creditable performance.

Professor Koch who is directing the production saw Joseph Jefferson in his farewell tour of the play in Boston twenty years ago. He has directed the cast in the way that Jefferson staged the play.

This is the annual production in the Forest Theatre. Last year Professor Koch and his players staged Shakespeare's "Tempest."

Engineers Will Not Hold Open House

The School of Engineering will not hold open house this year as it has done in the past two years. The reason for not holding the affair this year is that it is too near the end of the school year and everyone in this school is very busy finishing up his work.

It is expected that in the future open house will be held only every other year. During the evenings when open house was observed, the entire department was open for inspection, and the operation of all the equipment in the laboratories was demonstrated to the visitors.

Delta Theta Phi, the largest of the three legal fraternities of the University, is one of the leading legal orders of the United States. There are sixty-six chapters of the fraternity located in colleges and universities throughout the country. Most of these are in the North and West—some of the most powerful of the chapters being located at Yale, University of California, University of Iowa, University of Wisconsin, George Washington University, University of Minnesota, and the University of Southern California.

The fraternity as it is now constituted represents a combination of three legal fraternities, this combination having been effected in 1902.

The present membership of the local chapter is eighteen.
