

President Says University Largely Self-Help In Reply To Carnegie Survey Report

Statement That Coach Has Assumed Duties of Physical Education Director Due to "Misconception."

COPY BULLETIN 23 IS RECEIVED HERE

With the receipt at the University of the full Carnegie report on college athletics last week instead of in December as the newspapers had previously announced, President Chase yesterday issued his first statement on the report.

"A misconception is responsible for the statement that the head coach has assumed the authority of the director of physical education," said Dr. Chase's statement in part. "This is not the correct state of affairs here. "Since Carolina is largely a self-help institution," President Chase continued, "many students work their way through. No preference, however, is shown to athletes in the distribution of self-help opportunities, scholarships, or loan funds." Dr. Chase said the University would rather risk an occasional injustice than exclude athletes entirely from scholarships, loan funds, and the like.

Dr. Chase has only glanced over the bulletin, which has raised many problems about the present state of college athletics in America. It contains so much matter that more leisurely reading is necessary to digest it thoroughly.

Only two copies of the report have arrived at the University: one is Dr. Chase's private copy, and the other will be placed in the education library Monday. Many students who have expressed a desire to read the report will be able to obtain it there. A copy of the bulletin may be obtained, free of charge, from the Carnegie foundation for the advancement of teaching, 522 Fifth Avenue, New York.

Dr. Chase's statement in full is as follows:

"The bulletin of the Carnegie foundation on college athletics has now been distributed. From a hasty reading of its nearly four hundred pages, the following facts stand out. First, the later Associated Press dispatches were correct in stating that the University of North Carolina is mentioned only three times. It is commended for the form of its athletic control and for the keeping of its athletic records and accounts. The third mention states that the head coach seems to have assumed an au-

Dr. Wilson will return Monday.

President Chase

Dr. Harry W. Chase, president of the University, issued his first statement yesterday since the publication of the Carnegie Survey Report on Intercollegiate Athletics. Dr. Chase declared that he saw no reason for discriminating against a man because he was an athlete in the awarding of scholarships.

N. C. To Beautify The Davis Highway

$1,600 To Be Spent; Red and White Crepe Myrtle Trees To Be Planted.

Plans are now underway for the expenditure of the $1600 fund recently authorized by the state division of the Daughters of the Confederacy for the beautification of the North Carolina section of the Jefferson Davis highway, it was announced here today by Mrs. John H. Anderson of Chapel Hill, state director of the highway.

The Jefferson Davis highway passes from the National Capital through the most beautiful and historic sections of this state and on to the Pacific coast. The states traversed by this road have recently been vying with each other in beautifying the highway.

The North Carolina division of the United Daughters of the Confederacy plans to make the section of the road that passes through this state one of the most beautiful and renowned highways of the country. It is their aim to plant red and white crepe myrtle trees along the way and to encourage farmers to compete in making the section of the road adjoining their property more beautiful.

Special attention will be paid to the beautification of the large granite markers placed at the boundaries of the state as well as to the improvement of these smaller markers along the highway.

This program is in keeping with the policy of other states to emphasize their routes by marking the historic spots through which the highway passes.

North Carolina was the first state to place permanent markers along her entire route, and it is now the plan of this state's division of the United Daughters of the Confederacy to make this the first state to beautify its entire section of the highway.

There was some trouble in securing a commencement orator for the graduation exercises in 1870.

Traders In This Village Escaped Losses In Panic

The Chapel Hill citizens who trade in stocks—most of them, anyway—suffered no serious loss in the recent panic. They got out of the market while the prices were still fairly high.

Very few of them are traders in the Wall Street sense of that word. That is, they do not operate on margin. They buy, outright, stocks that they think are good and hold them primarily for investment; but sometimes, when they read in the newspapers that stock prices have had a big rise, they sell out and reap a good profit.

The stock of the Cities Service Company, which has been bought extensively in this section largely because it has been marketed actively through its subsidiary, the Durham Public Service Company, experienced one of the worst declines in Wall Street last week and this week. It dropped from 68 to 22 in about fifteen days, most of the drop coming between last Thursday and last Tuesday. But many Chapel Hill owners had sold out on the rise. One merchant here sold his holdings at 66, two points from the peak.

Legion Arranges To Present Play On November 10

The Chapel Hill post of the American Legion has arranged to present the famous moving picture play, "The Soul of France," Sunday afternoon and evening, November 10, at the Carolina Theatre in connection with the celebration of Armistice Day. There will be no admission charge, but there will be a free-will offering for the benefit of the fund which the Legion post uses for the relief of the disabled World War veterans.

The presentation of the picture is made by the cooperation of E. Carrington Smith, manager of the Carolina, with the officers of the post. A committee of Legionnaires called upon Mr. Smith and asked for the use of the theatre to present a benefit performance the 10th. "I will put the theatre at your disposal and try to get you any picture you want," he replied. After a discussion they decided on the stirring war drama which is now drawing large crowds in New York.

Rev. Alfred S. Lawrence, state chaplain of the Legion as well as post chaplain here, will conduct a brief memorial service and make a few minutes' talk before the picture is shown on the afternoon of the 10th. Before the evening performance, which will be timed not to conflict with the church services, Robert B. House is expected to welcome the crowd and say a few words about the post's purpose in presenting the play.

PRESS RELEASES JOHNSON'S BOOK

Author Previously Collaborated With Howard W. Odum In Negro Folk-Lore Works.

"John Henry," a new book by Prof. Guy B. Johnson, who previously collaborated with Prof. Howard W. Odum in "The Negro and His Songs" and "Negro Workaday Songs," is now ready for release by the University of North Carolina Press.

For some time Professor Johnson has been engaged in tracking down a negro legend—the legend of John Henry, the Paul Bunyan of the south, the "natural man" who died "with his hammer in his hand." Was he man or myth? No one really knows. Did he actually win a race with a steam drill while driving steel in Big Ben Tunnel? Maybe.

Whether John Henry lived or whether he was simply the Negro's fabrication of the superhuman hero, the legends about him make fascinating reading, and the ballads that have sprung up about him are some of the richest in Negro lore.

"John Henry is, I suppose," says Professor Johnson, "the Negro's greatest folk character. His fame is sung in every nook and corner of the United States where Negroes live, sung oftenest by wanderers and laborers who could tell three times as much about John Henry as they could about Booker T. Washington."

Aside from the popular interest, Professor Johnson had a special interest in finding whether there is any basis in fact for the legends that have sprung up about John Henry. What was his relation to John Hardy? In his research in this connection this University professor has amassed more evidence about this Paul Bunyan of the South and more versions of rich balladry than have before been brought together.

"I marvel," writes Professor Johnson, "that some new Negroes with an artistic bent do not exploit the wealth of John Henry lore. Here is material for an epic poem, for a play, for an opera, for a Negro symphony."

"Maybe there was no John Henry," concludes the author. "One can easily doubt it. But there is a vivid, fascinating, tragic legend about him which Negro folk have kept alive and have cherished for more than half a century and in so doing they have enriched the culture of America."

And so, with his lineage in reality disputed, his grave unmarked, John Henry's spirit goes marching on.

Raleigh Team Outclassed From Beginning; Carolina Line Holds to Keep State From Scoring.

Nash and Erickson Feature With Runs

The North Carolina State Wolfpack slunk back to its lair yesterday humbled and beaten by a strong Tar Heel eleven, 32-0, before 8,000 spectators.

Their claws rendered impotent by a charging line, State fell before a bewildering attack by one of the largest scores in the 36 years of competition. But once during the entire contest did the Tech men threaten the Carolina goal.

The great Tech team of 1927, which defeated Carolina 19-6, and the fighting team of last year, which held a favored Tar Heel eleven to a 6-6 tie, was not in evidence on the field of battle today. Line plays were smothered before well under way, and passes were knocked down or intercepted.

The mixture of straight football and a deceptive passing attack was too much for State. Where a line play failed to gain a pass netted the necessary yards. When a pass threw the line off guard a quick thrust through the middle or a concerted drive off tackle made it first down with ten to go.

Thirty-three players, three full teams, were used by Coach Chuck Collins to win the fray. Every possible substitute on the sidelines saw some service during the afternoon. No combination was favored over any other, and all relentlessly pushed the ball into Tech territory, with a setback here and there, finally to add to the string of markers.

A second string eleven started the contest. After an exchange of punts Carolina took the ball in midfield. A pass Maus to Nash carried the ball to the 17 yard line. Maus shot another bullet-like heave to Brown for the first touchdown.

State received the kickoff on their own 34 yard line. The Carolina line stiffened and State was forced to punt. Nash received the kick on his own 40 yard line and side-stepped through the entire State team for a touchdown. The long run was one of the prettiest broken-
