

Katherine McHale Addresses State Delegation Of A. A. U. W.

Dr. Katherine McHale, acting director and educational chairman of the American Association of University Women, addressed representatives of the North Carolina branches on the objectives of the national organization with special emphasis upon its new program and the million dollar fellowship fund, Sunday afternoon in the Washington Duke hotel, Durham. Mrs. E. R. Mosher, president of the state organization, presided. More than fifty women present were representatives from Durham, Greenville, Greensboro, High Point, Raleigh, Chapel Hill and Winston-Salem.

Dr. McHale began her remarks by explaining the purpose of the acting director of the A. A. U. W., a position which was created by executive action at the biennial convention of the organization last April in New Orleans. She reviewed hastily the past educational achievements of the association, referring especially to the report on history textbooks and the program for parental education carried on by Dr. Lois Hayden Meek.

In presenting the million dollar fellowship fund, Dr. McHale stated that 16 units had already pledged quotas. The unit idea is possible as a city, a state or a section if the quota is from $30,000 to $40,000, which at four per cent will realize either $1200 or $1600 annually for a fellowship. The unit may specify whether the fellowship is to be national or international, or it may leave the assignment to the discretion of the association.

To date there has been received for international fellowships, $6,056.21; national fellowships, $9,396.80; undesignated, $15,183.17; making a total of $30,636.18. Of this amount North Carolina has contributed $287.91.

These fellowships are to enable women to compete successfully with men. They are to be awarded to women who have been out of college between five and ten years and who need assistance in advancing their work, and to women with special talents. At present the association has fifteen fellowships with hundreds of applicants.

Preceding the special meeting at 3 o'clock, there was a joint luncheon of the Professional and Business Woman's clubs and the American Association of University Women. Miss Leona Glidewell of Reidsville, president of the North Carolina professional and business group, presided and Dr. O. Lathan Hatcher, director of the Southern Woman's Educational Alliance, and Dr. McHale delivered addresses.

Bureau Standards Seeks Assistant

Dr. Otto Stuhlman announced today that he has received a bulletin from the Bureau of Standards saying that there is a vacancy in the position of assistant editor.

The duties of this assistant editor are to edit technical material for form, style, make-up, etc., and to prepare popular material based upon the investigations and field activities of the Bureau of Standards. The position pays $2600 per year.

The competitors are not required to take an examination but are graded on education and experience (70 points) and samples of work filed (30 points). Applicants are considered from graduates who have had courses in physics and chemistry and at least two years editorial experience dealing with technical and scientific matter.

Further information may be obtained from Dr. Otto Stuhlman.

Fire Damages Car

A Chevrolet roadster, owned by Mr. Williams of the building department of the University, caught fire about 10:30 o'clock yesterday morning near the Gimghoul Castle. The fire department was called and succeeded in extinguishing the blaze after the fire had done considerable damage to the body. The motor was not damaged.

Saville Here

Caleb Saville, chief engineer and manager of the Metropolitan Water district of Hartford, Conn., has been visiting his son, Professor Thorndike Saville, for the past few days.

Mr. Saville was very much impressed with the University, especially with the facilities of the engineering school.

All Juniors and Seniors are expected to have their Yackety Yack pictures made before December 10. Make your appointments today at Patterson's and The Student Supply Store from 1 to 3 and from 5:30 to 7:30 o'clock.

Player Control Is Not a New Idea

ment that years of experience in after life might fail to teach. Is any one defeat or series of defeats upon the field of sport too great a price to pay for such a lesson?

Standard of Play Suffers

But, it is asked, are the players not too close to the game to see it as a whole? Will it not be less well played when no omniscient spirit can stand off to view the game in its entirety from the aloofness of the bench? Again yes. Player captains running a game under player control will of course make many mistakes that seasoned and experienced coaches sitting on the bench would never make. Errors in judgment and mistakes in tactics of all sorts will come fast and often; unquestionably the standard of play suffers. But what of it?

If the game of football is played for the spectators perhaps this ruling is unfortunate, although newspaper observers in Buffalo and Rochester have claimed that games are better played because of captain control. If, however, football is played for the boys it is of no importance whatsoever whether the team puts on a good show or not provided the players get the value and the lessons that are there to be learned when they are running as well as playing the game. The duty of scholastic and collegiate football teams is not to be professional gladiators for the mob. It is to furnish sport for themselves and their followers. Once this precept is admitted—and who will controvert it?—the winning or losing of a game becomes secondary. Moreover, is it not obvious that if both teams are playing under the control of their captains with their coaches on the bench, both are liable to the same errors and mistakes in the course of play?

Take Responsibility Early

One great objection raised has been that schoolboys cannot be trusted to direct and govern their own games at such an early age. Yet at the age of sixteen the State permits boys to leave school and begin the far more difficult business of earning a living. And the government in Washington urges boys of seventeen to join the navy and boys of eighteen to join the army; in the World War many boys of little more than that had responsibilities of a much more serious nature.

One of the men up state who was formerly against general regulation No. 1, and who is now heartily in favor of it, is Mr. Carl G. Chamberlain, the director of physical education in the Charlotte high school of Rochester. Mr. Chamberlain was a sergeant in charge of a platoon on the battlefields of France at the age of nineteen. Strange to say he fails to believe that a boy at this period in his life is unable to run a football team.

No, if the American boy of the twentieth century is not able to take up the problem of directing his own play time, if he is such a weakling that he cannot even control his sports, what use will he be in after life when decisions and problems a thousand times more important will be thrown at him from every side? And what better training ground can he have to form initiative, character and the habit of depending upon himself than the training ground afforded by the field of sport?

One of the most distressing arguments adduced against the idea that football coaches—and coaches in other sports also—should remain during the game in the stands is that an honest coach cannot prevent a dishonest coach from taking advantage of him. Thus there are ways of circumventing this rule as there are ways of getting around every rule made by man, and the honest coach in honestly working out the idea is very plainly handicapped. The only relief, the relief which is certain to come in time, is the gradual elimination of the dishonest coach.

ARMISTICE CELEBRATION RECALLS UNSELFISHNESS OF PAST SAYS J. H. PRATT

every loyal citizen rose to meet the situation in 1917 and 1918. He implored the people to exercise their right as citizens to vote; to be just as patriotic now as during the war, and to help make our government truly one for the people, of the people and by the people.

The Armistice day celebrations began Sunday with the presentation of "The Soul of France," a war play sponsored by the American Legion, at the Carolina theatre. The services yesterday were managed by John M. Booker of the University English department, who is chairman of the joint committee of the University faculty and the local American Legion post. The services began with the invocation by Rev. A. S. Lawrence, state chaplain of the Legion and chaplain of the post here, followed by the singing of the national anthem. Dean Addison Hibbard read the roll of the University World War dead and Commander Paul Robertson, of the Orange county Legion post, read the roll of the Orange county dead.

Immediately before 11 o'clock, during Colonel Pratt's address, taps was sounded and a one-minute silence was observed. The celebration closed with the singing of America and the pronouncement of the benediction.

Students To Hear New Football Song At Thanksgiving Classic

have one. It was with this in mind that the authors wrote the composition. If it proves popular, and there is little doubt that it will, the song will probably be adopted as the official gridiron melody of the local university.

At the chapel period today the song will be introduced to one group. The other groups of the student body which have chapel periods on other days of the week, will learn it later.

The Y quartet will sing the song several times at chapel and then the student body will join in and practice it. At the Virginia game, the cheer leaders and the band will lead it.

The song was written indirectly by Mr. Bryson and Mr. Malone, the latter being president of Wigwe and Masque, for the opening song of Wigwe and Masque's musical revue in that organization's annual presentation next spring.

Mr. Malone in the past has written the music for the last two presentations of Wigwe and Masque, "Mum's the Word" last spring, and "Whoops My Dear" two years ago. Both of these productions were highly successful.

Mr. Bryson, known as "Block," has been prominently connected with the Carolina Playmakers and took a leading part in the Masque production, "Mum's the Word."
