

JOINT SESSION DECLARES DAILY PAPER IS SOUND

Literary Societies Favor Issuance of Daily Tar Heel; Discussion Is Heated.

The Dialectic and Philanthropic literary societies in their joint quarterly session held in the Di hall last night passed by a large majority the following bill, Resolved: That the Dialectic senate and Philanthropic assembly in joint session go on record as believing the issuance of a daily paper at the University of North Carolina is basically sound and practical. The vote was 28 to 3.

The discussion was opened by Senator McPherson who supported the bill with the argument that such a paper was needed to keep the students well informed concerning campus affairs, and that the present financial difficulties of the publication would be offset in later years by increased national advertising. He argued that national advertisers will not increase space during the first year of a change in a college publication.

The first speaker to oppose the bill was Representative Lang who questioned the promises made by various leaders when the campaign for a Daily Tar Heel was being waged. He also stated that the financial standing was decidedly unfavorable, but Editor Glenn Holder corrected his information concerning finance. Holder stated that the paper would in all probability break even this year or incur a slight loss, and also stated that the first year was bound to present financial difficulty.

Representative Wilkinson aided Representative Lang in opposing the bill, by arguing that there was not sufficient campus news to fill a daily paper and that a lot of "bullshooting" was used to fill the columns. Representative Carr seemed to like the "bullshooting" if that was what was in the Daily Tar Heel.

The affirmative was further supported by Senators Shreve, Ramsay, Herkimer and Wright. The negative was supported by Representatives Lang and Wilkinson only.

BULL'S HEAD SHOP ATTRACTS LARGE NUMBER VISITORS

Students who are seldom seen in the vicinity of the Bull's Head shop have been presenting themselves at this rendezvous of tense-faced folk in surprising numbers of late. The attendant, and the quiet group usually found reading there, are frequently seen to raise their glances momentarily from their favorite book to scrutinize some anxious-eyed intruder who stumbles against chairs and fumbles over the shelves in search of—they know not what.

"No, I shall not inquire where the book is. I want to make the discovery myself," muses the evident stranger. His eyes play over the well-kept shelves. The evasiveness of the object of his interest causes him to become more intent in his search for the hidden treasure. All's Quiet on the Western Front and The Tragic Era are shamelessly ignored. The diminutive room is circled again by the questing student. Not a trace of despair is revealed in the determined face. Eyes of other readers restlessly survey the shelves; they, too, have joined in the search.

Finally the student pauses and withdraws from between Dumas the Incredible Marquis and The Omnibus of Crime the long-sought volume—Richard Halliburton's New Worlds to Conquer. Seated at the table environment vanishes, as, within the space of perhaps an hour the reader journeys with the prince of travelers to the alluring spots of an entire continent.

Pages are turned . . . the tying of a watch becomes the voice of a far-away waterfall. The arrival of other students seems but a vague stirring of the prisoners in the blockhaus on Iles du Salut . . . and—the drama and tragedy roll on. The bell for lunch is sounded. Less enthusiastic readers hastily file from the room. The boy at the table, unobvious of intrusion, continues to sail the Southern Seas.

Another book by Halliburton has arrived. The word is passed from friend to friend and enthusiast to enthusiast. At present one may note such a process as described above occurring at most any period of the day. All become victims for an hour, charmed by the beauty of Popo, enchanted by the cry of the winds through the pinnacled Inca city, Manchu Picchu.

Woollen Asks People Of Village To Leave Automobiles At Home

The people of Chapel Hill are requested to leave their cars at home when they attend the football game on Thursday. By doing this they will greatly facilitate the handling of traffic through the town and on the highways leading out. It will be recalled that a great deal of difficulty was experienced in clearing the streets of cars after the Georgia contest. The few hundred cars which the townspeople will necessarily be driving in an opposite direction to the general run of traffic make for unnecessary congestion. Co-operation in this effort will be appreciated.

CHARLES T. WOOLLEN
Graduate Manager.

THORNDIKE SAVILLE GOES TO MEETING AT GULFPORT

On December 4 Mr. Saville will attend a meeting of the U. S. Army Engineer Board on beach erosion to which he is consulting engineer. The board is meeting at Pensacola, Fla., to report on improvements to Pensacola harbor. It will also consider a report on a proposed large jetty at the entrance to New York harbor which it has had under investigation for some time.

VIRGINIA GAME PEP MEETING TO BE AT OLD PICK

Annual Rally Will Be At 9 O'clock Tonight; Boxing Show To Follow.

Music by the University band and speeches by coaches and football players of this and bygone years, are the features of the pep meeting to be held tonight at 9 o'clock in the old Pickwick theatre. For the benefit of the freshmen this theatre is the old movie house directly across the street from the Carolina theatre. In previous years these pep meetings were always held in Memorial hall, but due to the repair work being done on that building it is impossible to hold the meeting there this year.

Jack Barrett, chief cheerleader, will be in charge of the program, which will be concluded with songs and cheers for the Tar Heel team which will carry the Blue and White in the 34th renewal of the ancient Carolina-Virginia football rivalry. As many as possible are urged to attend, for the finishing touches will be put on the song written by Wex Malone and "Block" Bryson especially for the Virginia game.

Many alumni are expected to join with the students in this celebration, for the streets of Chapel Hill already show the effects of the influx of the old grads.

Following the pep meeting a big boxing show will be put on in the Tin Can. Seven bouts have been arranged by Coach Rowe, boxing mentor. All bouts will be between men on the squad, and as Coach Rowe has such mitmen to work with as Levinson, Jimmy Gray, Goodrich, Sheffield, Shemwell, Gray, Preston, Patterson, Overman, Glover, Stallings, Jackson, Kauffman, Smathers, Logan, Warren, Gaylord, Maybank and Avery to draw from, good bouts are expected.

Engineers Weekly Meeting Postponed

The meetings of the Mechanical Engineering Society and the William Cain student branch of the American Society of Civil Engineers, have been postponed from this Thursday evening until next week, and the meeting of the local student branch of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers has been postponed from December 5 to December 12.

These meetings are postponed because Thursday, when the societies usually meet, is an official University holiday, and very few students would attend a meeting held that evening.

Self-Help Notice

All persons desiring to have work done over the week-end will please notify Grady Leonard, self-help secretary of the Y, at once. There are many students who are unable to go to their homes Thanksgiving and would desire any kind of work, Mr. Leonard states.

BRADSHAW TELLS ABOUT HOLIDAY ABSENTEE RULE

Dean of Students Explains The Importance of Obeying Rule Against Cutting Classes Before And After Holidays.

In chapel Tuesday morning Dean F. F. Bradshaw explained the rule that students are placed on probation for 30 days for absence from classes on the day before or the day after holidays.

Since many have failed to understand this rule Dean Bradshaw explained its operation and the reason for it. A large number of absences are due to good roads and the recent institution of "bumming," the dean said. This is especially true of absences before and after holidays, when students wish to lengthen their stays away from the Hill. Dean Bradshaw said that the desire and opportunity of increasing the holidays by absences has caused a serious attendance problem. He pointed out the fact that it is necessary to set certain dates for recess periods and that all rather than merely a part of the student body must abide by the arrangement.

Dean Bradshaw said that the holidays were selected by the vote of the student body a few years ago. Hence the present body should be all the more willing to accept the dates that have been set. The dean of students urged the students not to ignore the rule but help meet the situation which has made it necessary.

Miss Herring Talks About Present Labor Situation At Y Meet

Three Y cabinets held a joint meeting Monday night at the Y at 7:15 for the purpose of hearing Miss Harriett E. Herring of the sociology department.

Miss Herring spoke to the group on the subject of the "Present Labor Situation." She began her talk by asking the question, "Why is there so much interest shown in the textile industry?" "One reason for this," states Miss Herring, "is that the textile industries employ whole families, whereas, other mills hire only men or women alone. Another reason," she continued, "is that the textile mill owners customarily furnish the homes in which their employees live. This helps a great deal in bettering the conditions of the workers."

In answer to the question as to whether the present labor condition was better or worse than the past she stated, "The mills of today are, without a doubt, much better in every way than those of former times." Miss Herring closed her talk by answering a few questions of cabinet members.

G. A. Metz, student pastor of the Lutheran church, ended the program with a word of prayer.
