Gardner's Address Features December Issue Of Journal

Number of Feature Stories Contained in Monthly Publication of School of Education; N. W. Walker Editor.

The December issue of the High School Journal, which is published by the school of education, was released by the University Press a short time ago and has been sent to its subscribers in this and other states.

The High School Journal is a medium by which the University is rendering service to teachers through its school of education. It is one of the few publications in the field of secondary education in the south, and is subscribed to by practically all the high schools in North Carolina, as well as by many in 37 other states and in seven foreign countries.

The Journal is edited by Dean N. W. Walker with the assistance of Professors Edgar W. Knight, E. R. Mosher, M. R. Trabue, and A. M. Jordan, all of the school of education. I. R. Griffin, also of the school of education, is business manager. Members of the training staff of the school of education prepare some of the general articles and conduct the special departments, but the Journal receives a considerable quantity of material for publication from high school principals and teachers throughout the state.

The December issue of the Journal is featured by the text of an address delivered at Chapel Hill on October 21 by Governor O. Max Gardner upon "The Significance of the Citizens' Library Movement," in which Governor Gardner emphasizes the need and value of the library as a method of instruction, as an aid in business life, and as an agent of cultural and spiritual progress among the people.

Three other articles of general interest are also included in the December issue. Guy B. Phillips, superintendent of the city schools of Greensboro, in the article "Bridging the Gap Between the School and the Public," stresses the individual task of each teacher to enlighten the

Dr. Henderson

Henderson Officer Historical Society

The states of Kentucky and Tennessee have recently, separately, celebrated the contributions of Colonel Richard Henderson, famous North Carolinian, who opened up the West in 1775. A notice was given in a former issue of the Tar Heel of a celebration in Henderson, Ky. Since that time Governor Horton of Tennessee pointed an entire week to be known as Tennessee Citizens Week in honor of Colonel Richard Henderson's contributions to the early settlement and development of Tennessee. He (Governor Horton) recently issued a public proclamation to that effect and sent Dr. Archibald Henderson of this institution an official and signed copy of that proclamation. Dr. Henderson is a descendant of the famous Col. Richard Henderson.

At Henderson, Ky., a new National Patriotic Society was formed known as The Transylvanians, leading officers of which are: Judge Robert W. Bingham, an alumnus of this University, Bishop Joseph B. Cheshire of this state, and Dr. Archibald Henderson.

The new Century quarterly for autumn 1929, contains an extended essay by Dr. Henderson, describing the contributions made by North Carolinians to the opening up of the West. This essay is entitled "Transylvania": a story of the bold and almost successful attempt to found the fourteenth American Colony.

This number of the Century contains the following notice:

"Archibald Henderson (Transylvania) is a graduate of the University of North Carolina and is now head of the mathematics department. He was a student at Cambridge University, the University of Berlin and the Sorbonne. Dr. Henderson is a scientist by profession, but he is also the leading authority of Westward Expansion in America during the eighteenth century, and the author of several books on the subject, the most important of which is "The Conquest of the Old Southwest." Dr. Henderson is also the biographer of Bernard Shaw."

December Issue Law Review Contains Interesting Cases

Organization and Functions of American Bar Association Discussed by University Publication; Allen Smith is Student Editor.

The December issue of the Law Review, publication of the Law School, was recently released. It contains material of popular interest as well as of a technical nature. "The O'Fallon Case: Latest Battle in the Public Utility Valuation War," by Professor G. H. Robinson of the Cornell Law School, sets forth the vast importance of this recent decision of the United States Supreme Court in the economic life of the country, involving billions of dollars in the valuation of railroad property alone. Concerned with questions growing out of the labor disturbances in Gastonia is the article by Judge J. Crawford Biggs on "Religious Belief as Qualification of a Witness," which brings together the important judicial decisions and statutes in that connection. Mr. C. B. Sparger, a certified public accountant and a lawyer, discusses "Profits, Surplus and the Payment of Dividends," in which he shows a divergence between the views of the accountants and the lawyer as to what constitutes profits and surplus for the payment of dividends.

The Open Court section of the Law Review contains five short articles, originally presented as papers in the course on Administration of Justice. They discuss the organization and functions of the bar, taking up the history of the American Bar Association and the North Carolina Bar Association. The activities of these organizations are analyzed with a view of indicating methods of improvement within the associations and presenting the latest movement in the United States for the improvement of the Bar, the so-called "Self-Governing Bar," now in operation in six states, and spreading rapidly. The comment entitled "The Thirteenth Juror" deals with the mistrial in the first trial of the Gastonia strikers due to the insanity of a juror.

There are fifteen notes and recent case comments, all but one of which are written by students. Four of these discussions are in the field of Banking and Negotiable Instruments, including many important questions of bank collections. There are two topics each in the fields of Evidence, Contracts and Equity and one each in Corporations, Criminal Law, Mortgages, Public Utilities and Trade Regulation.

The Law Review is printed and contains 128 pages of reading matter. There are twenty-one student editors, assisted by four faculty editors. Allen K. Smith is student editor-in-chief and John H. Anderson, Jr., and James H. Chadborn are assistant editors. Professor R. H. Wettach is the faculty advisor to the publication.

Vocational Bureau Described in Talk

The work of the bureau of vocational information was described in chapel Wednesday morning by Henry Johnston, who is engaged in this work in the office of the dean of students. Mr. Johnston told of the history and extensiveness of the vocational guidance movement and the nature of the local bureau.

The movement began a few years ago when a man opened in Boston an office for the purpose of advising young men on vocations. It received a great deal of impetus during the war by methods used in placing men in the army and later through steps taken by business organizations in establishing personnel departments. Mr. Johnston said that from this the movement spread into education where it could meet especially the needs of young people.

Mr. Johnston stated that the local bureau of vocational information equipped itself by gathering information about the various occupations and also about work in certain firms and organizations. In this way both a general and specific knowledge of certain fields of work is placed at the disposal of the student.

Mr. Johnston mentioned that the bureau has a book shelf on vocational study in the library. The bureau has in the past sponsored series of chapel talks on the subject.

Mr. Johnston stated that as much as possible is being done through the bureau of vocational information, although the work is of necessity conducted on a small scale. Since only a few of the men of the University can be advised, the bureau attempts to aid chiefly seniors and graduate students.

There will be two vacancies in the Graduate Club beginning January 3. Professional students of advanced standing and graduates of the University are eligible. ## Anti-Peddling Law Passed In Good Faith By Aldermen

(By E. C. Daniel, Jr.)

Since a great deal of ill-will and misunderstanding has been created among the students, Chapel Hill merchants, and the municipal government by the recent passage of an anti-peddling ordinance by the board of aldermen, a few words in explanation of the act and the grounds of misunderstanding might help to clarify the situation.

An open forum letter appearing in the issue of this paper for Thursday, November 28, and written by a student, declared the ordinance to be an instrument of the merchants of the town, passed for their benefit and worked out by them. The writer of the letter seemed to think that the movement was made in an effort to prevent self-help students from selling football novelties, programs, etc., giving the privilege and profit to the merchants alone.

In yesterday's edition of the Daily Tar Heel an apology from this critic was printed. He retracted his previous statements, declaring that he had misinterpreted the tone and motive behind the measure.

The first of the letters would have one believe that the town

PHILANTHROPIC ASSEMBLY PICKS TERM OFFICERS

John Lang to Head Body for Winter Quarter; Banquet Follows Election.

The quarterly elections of the Philanthropic Assembly were held at its regular meeting Tuesday night. A banquet in the hall followed the election.

Upon motion, the Assembly voted to meet in the hall of the Assembly on the night of the Mary D. Wright Debate and to go in a body to the debate. Several amendments to the constitution in regard to the election of officers were made by vote of the Assembly. The report of Representative James Harris, treasurer, was presented and accepted.

The following representatives were elected officers of the Assembly for the winter quarter: Speaker, John Lang; Speaker pro-tem, Thomas Baldwin; Sergeant-at-Arms, Bert Haywood; Reading Clerk, Hamilton Hobgood; Assistant treasurer, F. M. James; Ways and Means Committee, G. P. Carr, chairman, James Wilkinson, and Edward Yarborough.

Speaker pro-tem Allbright, who has served in the absence of Speaker Speight, in his retiring address thanked the Assembly for its support during the quarter and expressed optimism for the work of the Assembly during the remainder of the year. Speaker Lang, in a short address, asked the cooperation of the representatives in an effort to continue the good work of the Assembly and promised his best efforts to that end. He announced that his inaugural address would be made at the opening session of the winter quarter.

At the conclusion of the business, a banquet was held in the rear of the hall. Representative Harris was in charge of the affair. Sandwiches and drinks were served to the members of the Assembly.

Anti-Peddling Law Passed In Good Faith By Aldermen

merchants were assuming a greedy attitude, attempting to take every possible opportunity away from the self-help students. As a matter of fact the merchants were not actually connected with the passing of the bill; they were merely an accessory to the program planned by the University and the board of aldermen to rid the town of an undesirable element that every football contest brings to the Hill. On those occasions a horde of novelty vendors and peddlers descend on the town with the avowed purpose of taking away as much money as possible from the town, including the profits of merchants and student salesmen. Most of them employ objectionable methods in their dealings and use no discrimination as to personal and property rights. Possessing these characteristics, they constitute an unwanted class in the University community.

Consequently, the aldermanic council determined to rid the streets of these "pests," but in order to do so they had to pass a law prohibiting peddling on the streets of the town and requiring, of course, the support of the Chapel Hill merchants,
