A THOUGHT FOR TODAY

Jealousy does more damage to people's lives than all the deadly sins. —Bishop F. L. Deane.

A Definite Federation

Early in May there will assemble here representatives of nearly every institution in North Carolina requiring a four-year course to begin organization of a North Carolina Student Federation. Preliminary plans have been drawn and invitations mailed to other institutions asking representation at the meeting to be held here May 10.

From the interest manifested to date the organization meeting will see the actual birth of a movement destined to have considerable influence in student circles in North Carolina. Essentially the student bodies are the same elsewhere as here. We all face the same problems and the method of discussing these is with others confronted with the same problems.

But of greater benefit will be the impetus such an organization would give to better relationship between neighboring institutions. While so-called "love feasts" may have temporary results, a permanent organization is needed to insure a continuance of peaceful relationship.

Too much credit cannot be given to John Lang, Red Greene and Ray Farris for the work they have done to cover the skeleton of a student federation with permanent flesh.

The Federation Movement Gains Impetus

For several months now a group of Carolina students have been advocating the formation of a State Federation of Students. Members of the local federation club are today visiting the federation groups which have been organized at Wake Forest, State, and Duke in the effort to secure organized support for their idea. It now appears that the efforts of the local club will be crowned with success when it meets here May 10, with representatives from nearly every major college in the state to discuss the problem of intercollegiate relationships in North Carolina and to organize, if possible, a state-wide federation in the interests of fostering good will among all the colleges of the commonwealth.

The movement for a federation of students comes in recognition of problems arising out of the great acceleration of intercollegiate rivalry which the last decade has witnessed in the state. The comparatively recent intense expansion of collegiate education in North Carolina has undoubtedly given rise to mass education evils which are highly analogous to those which have accompanied the rather recent widespread industrialization of the state. We believe that the proposed federation of students would eliminate much of the strife and bitterness which, although it is in the infant stage as yet, is beginning to crop out. This is particularly applicable to Carolina-Duke relations. The proximity of the two universities, when coupled with the fact that Duke is growing by leaps and bounds and is threatening the pinnacle of supremacy which Carolina has occupied for a long number of years, cannot conceivably breed any condition other than that of over-emphasized rivalry. Over-emphasized rivalry always results in bitterness and hatred. We believe that a state-wide federation of students, holding regular meetings to which each college member sends representatives, will accomplish much toward solving the problems of bitterness which are bound to accrue from the Duke-Carolina situation and others similar to it.

The chief virtue of the proposed federation is that it will substitute organized, official action for the customary mass action of the student bodies concerned in any particular controversy. For quite a while the need for some medium through which to systematically trash out the problems of intercollegiate rivalry has been apparent in this state. We believe that the proposed student federation is the desired medium. The success of the recent joint meeting of the Carolina and Duke literary societies substantiates this conclusion: The meetings of the federation would be essentially similar to this joint meeting of the literary societies of Duke and Carolina. The chief apparent difference is that more colleges would be represented. There is good reason for believing that this factor would heighten the good accomplished by the federation meetings, rather than lessen it. It is generally conceded by the student bodies of Carolina and Duke that the joint meeting of the literary societies in Chapel Hill accomplished much toward bringing about a feeling of mutual interests between them. Proceeding from this premise, the writer feels no hesitancy in advancing the idea that the state-wide student federation which it is hoped will be organized here May 10 will establish and guarantee the continuance of mutual aims among the collegiate institutions of the state.

We call upon the Carolina student body to rally to the support of the student federation movement.

A Chicago alderman complains that the activities of the Strawn committee tend to weaken the people's confidence in their elected officials. At this safe distance we would say that it could do with a little weakening. —The New Yorker.

A Co-ed "Tells Them So"

Since I predicted several of the winners in the various track events correctly, and being a woman I could not help but try a "I told you so" story. Oh, I know that I missed more than I guessed but then I did get a few right and they are the ones I'm "blowing about." What does it matter if I made a few mistakes and hurt a lot of folks' feelings because I didn't think they would win? I do well to remember who was victorious at all when there was the nicest looking man in front of me—one that I had never seen before and a girl near the front had on the duckiest ensemble I ever saw. Well, I spent most of my time planning one just like it except mine was to be a little different around the neck when I heard the man announcing to the world in general that Rip Slusser won the low hurdles. I deserted my imaginary sewing at a very crucial place long enough to turn to my companion and say, "I told you so!"

So the meet progressed, in spite of the soggy track and whenever I found that I had made a mistake I very quickly remarked that "It's too bad that it rained" or else, "Wonder why so many out-of-state people ventured forth?" and once I said quickly, when an embarrassing moment rolled round, "I wonder who the man in the beret might happen to be?" He didn't know—nor did I know why I was wrong.

I told you that Pot Adkins would put the shot all over the place and have it all over the other boys. Well, sir, he threw that thing an awful piece. Had a lot of fun watching that but I don't see why they turn around after they throw it. Guess they are afraid to look and see where it landed and want to break the news to themselves gently. After thinking it over I believe they turn before they throw—but I've filled up space. I told you that Neiman would trip himself somewhere. Yes sir, even if I said pole vault I take credit for being half right. He can certainly jump—a regular grasshopper—and the way he sails through the air would make you think someone is dangling a "Lucky" instead of a sweet" before his eyes.

Even "I told you so's" get boring so I'll quit my nagging and wait until something else comes my way. It's a lot of fun predicting and remember "I told you so."—Mary Marshall Dunlap.

Talking Pictures Draw From Legitimate State

With a single exception, all the leading members of the cast of "She Couldn't Say No," the Warner Bros. and Vitaphone production which shows at the Carolina theatre today, have had extended experience on the stage.

Winnie Lightner, one of the stars of the screen drama, has for a long time been recognized as one of the few funny feminine artists appearing before the public. She has been in vaudeville for many years, appeared opposite W. C. Fields in "The Scandals," and was also seen in "Gay Paree."

Among the other stars who have had previous stage experience are Chester Morris, who first appeared when he was 15 years old, Johnny Arthur, who has spent more than 25 years before the footlights; and Tully Marshall who made his first appearance in 1883 and who has been in motion pictures for the past ten years.

The only important member of the cast who has never been on the stage is Sally Eilers, who left high school to become a screen "flapper"—and has been one ever since. Her first outstanding success was achieved in "The Goodbye Kiss."

Tar Heel Man Discovers Ceandal In I Dorm Store

ever, never seems to bother the residents of the dormitory who go about constantly happy with their appetites always satisfied. Their only complaint is that the store is not open often enough. Recently one of them has been designated to ring a large cowbell each time the store is open, which is getting more and more seldom, and that all the students of the dorm come flying like humming bees to a hive.

Beginning this quarter, the store has been open only from 11 at night to 3 in the morning. The total income so far as a result has been two campus political offices, 19 hours of bull sessions, and no money. The two storekeepers appear worried about their financial condition, but they continue to walk about with the unconcerned look which such experts are able

Canvass Of Fleece Potentialities Is Taken By Reporter

Speculation always runs rife each year as to the possible Fleece men. It has become a custom for the Daily Tar Heel to present through its columns a composite opinion of students selected at random as to the men most deserving the honor.

The following list of outstanding Carolina men is the resume of the opinions of the student body as a whole as to who will be tapped. The list is not arranged in any particular order, but the most likely candidates have their honors printed.

It is of almost universal opinion that Ed Hamer, president-elect of the Y. M. C. A., should be among the first to be tapped. Hamer is a member of the Grail, Minotaurs, Epsilon Phi Delta, Cabin; is assistant editor of the Yackety Yack and a commencement marshal.

Burgess Whitehead, elected to head the athletic council at the recent election, and winner of scholastic awards offered athletes, as well as a Phi Beta Kappa man, took a high place in the recent balloting.

Will Yarborough, editor-in-chief of the Daily Tar Heel, is to be strongly considered. Since the conversion of the paper from a tri-weekly to a daily, the position of editor has become the second most important student office on the campus. Yarborough is also treasurer of the German Club, member of the Sheiks; was a freshman track man, and member of the Yackety Yack staff of 1927-28. He has served as managing editor of the Daily Tar Heel and as president of the Publications Union Board.

The student body was surprised last year that the name of Archie Allen was not included among the Fleece men tapped. Allen has been president of the athletic association, captain of the boxing team, southern bantam-weight champion of 1929, and was largely responsible for boxing being made a major sport at Carolina. He is also a member Gorgon's Head, the Daviens, Minotaurs, Cabin. He was treasurer of his junior class, a member of the executive committee, and voted the most social in the senior class this year. He is to be the commencement ball manager this year.

High scholarship almost automatically wins a place among those tapped, and Joe Eagles, who has received but one grade below A since coming to Carolina, probably will be made president of Phi Beta Kappa, is undoubtedly of Fleece caliber. He has been active in publications and was secretary of the Y. M. C. A. He is also member of the Grail and Sheiks.

Perhaps the best-liked among the athletes who will be active next year is Noah Goodridge, captain elect of the boxing team. Goodridge also a man of high character, and is a religious leader and student pastor of the Presbyterian church.

Pat Patterson, recently chosen president of the senior class and business manager of the Daily Tar Heel, stands high in student approval. His activities include business manager of the Buccaneer, Y. M. C. A. work; and he is a member of the Grail and Alpha Kappa Psi.

J. C. Williams, in addition to being editor-elect of the Carolina Magazine and associate editor of the Daily Tar Heel has a better record than any other debater on the campus; namely, no defeats in eleven encounters. He has the distinction of having won both the Bingham and Wright medals. Williams has also served as president of the Di Senate and president of the Debate Council. He is mainly responsible for the Carolina-Virginia radio debate's being made an annual affair. Williams belongs to the Epsilon Phi Delta and Tau Kappa Alpha orders.

The new editor of the Yackety Yack, Clyde Dunn, thoroughly fits the qualifications demanded by the Fleece. He is retiring president of the Publications Union Board, has been active in Y. M. C. A. work, and has a high scholastic standing. John Bullock, retiring president of the interfraternity council, and president elect of the German Club, has been manager of baseball, and is a member of the Gorgon's Head and the Monogram Club.

Among other names prominently mentioned is that of Mayne Albright, who has been a varsity wrestler and debater, speaker pro tem of the Phi, a member of the Grail and Sheiks, and was recently elected student council representative from the senior class.

John Lang, retiring vice-president of the Y. M. C. A., speaker of the Phi, a Phi Beta Kappa man, and chief instigator and organizer of the movement to found a state federation of students, is a logical candidate for the highest campus honor.

Strud Nash, on the basis of his being captain of the football team, and for his various social activities, is considered Fleece material.

Other students most frequently mentioned for the honor include Dave Nims, Henry House, Marion Follin, Flem Wiley, Peyton Abbott, George Thompson, Dave Craig, Beverly Moore, K. C. Ramsay, Ike Manning and Aubrey Parsley.

Forsyth High School Seniors Visit Here

Yesterday the University was host to 173 members of the senior classes of Forsyth county high schools, together with several members of the faculty and Mr. Cash, superintendent of the county's schools.

This delegation visited in Raleigh yesterday morning and stopped at the University in the afternoon. They saw various points of interest and attended the baseball game between Georgia and Carolina as guests of Carolina.

The tour of the campus was arranged by Mr. Cash, an alumnus, Mr. I. C. Griffin, and the Forsyth County Club.
