FOUR FROM SOUTH WIN FELLOWSHIPS

Two From University Of Texas Win Yale Awards.

Out of 179 fellowships and scholarships given by the graduate school of Yale University for the year 1930-31, four were received by southern men.

Two men receiving fellowships for graduate study in government and political science were Charles E. Davis, a graduate of the University of Texas, and Cecil H. Tolbert, also a graduate of the University of Texas. These fellowships are made possible through the gift of the Cowles Foundation for the study of government, made to Yale University by members of the family of Alfred Cowles of the Chicago Tribune.

Another southerner receiving a fellowship was Charles D. Matthews, a graduate of Birmingham-Southern College. Mr. Matthews was given his fellowship for research in Semitic languages.

The fourth fellowship, that was awarded to a southern man went to William C. Bramble for research in organic chemistry. This award was donated to Yale by the Texas Oil Company.

Bill McDade

Bill McDade was 76 years old yesterday.

He started in as a janitor for the University at the re-opening in 1875 and served the institution for 33 years without a break. For his first quarter of a century there was no central heating or water-works, and he had to make a fire and carry water for every room in the Old East, and in several recitation rooms as well.

George Stephens of Asheville, alumnus of the University and an old friend of Bill's happened to be at my house when Bill called the other day. And the three of us exchanged reminiscences about past days in Chapel Hill.

"I used to get up at 4 o'clock in the morning," said Bill, "cause I had to start early to get the work done. We janitors took turn about ringing the bell, each one ringing it a week at a time. The janitors these days don't know what work is compared with what we did."

"I never will forget," said Mr. Stephens, "how quickly Bill could make a fire. He would come in when I was asleep, pile a lot of wood in the fireplace, throw a little oil on it, and be gone, leaving a big blaze, before I could open my eyes."

After Bill quit the University's service he began working

WRIGHT RECEIVES NEW FELLOWSHIP

To Continue Studies In England In June.

Dr. Louis B. Wright of the English department of the University will return to England in June to complete the collection of material for a book which he is preparing on the culture and literature of the English middle class during the Renaissance.

He has just received a continuation of the Guggenheim fellowship which he held in 1928-29 and plans to spend most of the time from June to the opening of the University in September at research work in the British Museum in London and in the Bodleian Library at Oxford.

Principals Who Actually Teach

In a recent study made by M. C. S. Noble, Jr., of the state department of public instruction, it is disclosed that more than fifty per cent of the white principals of North Carolina schools teach from three to five periods each day. Only 130 of the 901 principals do not have actual classroom duties. The largest groups teach four periods a day. The class periods range from 40 to 60 minutes each. "This should dispel any fear that these school officials as a whole do not take part in teaching activities," states a bulletin issued by the department of public instruction.

New Service Station

Work is being pushed along rapidly on the new Standard Oil filling station which will be located on the lot between the Methodist parsonage and J. T. Harris' residence on West Franklin street. The ground is being leveled, foundations laid, and the tanks put underground.

for fraternities, and now he is the janitor for the Beta Theta Pi's. He is still hale and hearty and enjoys nothing so much as greeting old-timers whom he used to know when they were boys here. He is serving today the grandsons of many of the men whom he served in the 70's and 80's.

tle brunette whom he had seen that afternoon, dressed at rehearsal in a boy's blue overalls and a none-too-immaculate undershirt (she did have on shoes too, perhaps). The wood magic had done its metamorphological stuff; she danced like a sylph, and she gave your correspondent a pretty interlude.

When your correspondent, between Acts II and III, strolled around a bit, he discovered a satyr or faun clinging to a great white-oak tree. When he addressed the faun, the faun answered in a rich Louisiana Creole drawl and unhooked a telephone receiver. He was a switchman in communication with Elmer Hall and Bob Dawes on the hill—one of half a dozen who manipulated lights on orders from the hilltop.

This incident and the overalls girl merely suggest the hard work and the marvelous organization that kept the scenes moving from Capulet's house on the extreme left to Friar Laurence's Cell and the Apothecary's Shop on the extreme right, from the street in front of the stage to the churchyard at the back. The writer does not know the technical slanguage, but he was told that the stage was organized on the multiple-set or unit-scene plan, the lights defining particular scenes and "blackouts" cutting off the rest of the stage. Whatever the terms, the things themselves were right. Mr. Hall made perfect adjustment between his sets and the natural background, giving the one that degree of definition that merged it into the latter, without parting.

And now for the audience and the tradition in which this superb performance was rooted. Your correspondent never stretched out under the Davie Poplar or warmed an assigned seat in the late lamented Memorial hall; he therefore did some thinking, perhaps, about things that the Carolinese took for granted. Where else, in all these United States, he asked himself, could such another experience be had for six bits? Where else could a band of collegiate youngsters, stiffened a bit by two or three wise older heads, put on Romeo and Juliet in such surroundings and get away with it-get away with balcony scenes, duels, deaths, and graveyards? Where else is there such a woodland theater, selected, improved, and otherwise let alone? Where else would such a group of people pay the-aforsaid six bits, sit on the ground (damp), and listen with quiet, deep enjoyment to such a show? If there is anyone else—and no doubt there is, though your correspondent doesn't know—such an institution as the Carolina Playmakers, then that institution has made all those places queried.

Chapel Hill Burglar Loses To Chicago Pair

Up until just the other day it was thought that someone either in or near Chapel Hill had committed the most unusual theft when he removed, without the owner's consent, the radiator from an automobile parked near the Tin Can last winter.

Now, however, a pair of men from Chicago, that city famous for its crime even if it is of the ordinary garden variety, have gone the local thief one better and Chapel Hill thereby loses its distinction. And we must concede that the story from Chicago has it all over the local tale.

"Do you know what those things are?" inquired a policeman of William Stacey and Albert Brusillo, when he saw them rolling a cart of merchandise from the plant of a printing firm.

"No, we don't," replied the pair who were beginning their careers of crime in this most unusual fashion.

"What are they?"
"Burglar Alarms."
And so Chapel Hill loses its distinction.

At a trustees meeting in the spring of 1896 it was decided that University students could join fraternities in October of the sophomore year instead of in January of the same year as had been the case before.
