AT THE CAROLINA

The program this week begins with the showing Monday of Marie Dressler and Polly Moran in their latest co-starring comedy, "Reducing." The picture might well be termed "Fun In A Beauty Parlor," since the best mirth provoking scenes are laid in a beauty parlor where the two principal stars are attempting to be made comely once more. The cast has in addition: Anita Page, Sally Eilers, Lucien Littlefield, and William Collier.

Tuesday's feature is another picture dealing with the subject of the younger generation and starring Loretta Young. The latest film of the beautiful and prolific Miss Young is "The Truth About Youth."

Joe E. Brown, famous stage comedian who has recently been seen on the screen in a number of features, comes again to the theatre Wednesday in his latest production, "Going Wild." In this picture the star is seen as a self-admitted aviator who has really never been in an airplane in his life.

Students Desire To Retain Present Class Attendance System

 will be the introduction of a two-year required course in a close study of the Old Testament; a fifth was amazed to see the day when the main difference between Duke and the University was one of architecture; a sixth inquired whether or not regular Saturday, and half day Sunday classes were part of the curriculum as yet, and thus it went, with practically every conversation whether serious or not, definitely gloomy and pessimistic.

It requires no trained expert and experienced social worker or investigator to see that with the incorporation of the compulsory attendance clause into the general rules of the University, there would go with it a certain atmosphere, a certain attitude among the students that has been struggling for its retention this past week. As was also said on the campus "the University seems to be losing those characteristics that make it such, and seems to be fast developing into a Chapel Hill College for Boys and Girls. Let us only hope that the faculty's insistent march toward Control and Supervision will stop short of creating a committee to see that students are all in bed by ten-thirty and that all lights are out."

The student body is most decidedly behind the resolution of the administrative council.

lone, played what could be called a fine game of basketball. Scoring seven points and guarding his man perfectly, he stood out head and shoulders above the other members of his team. However, there are others on the squad and some that have been overlooked so far that show a great deal of promise.

Coach Enright has returned and will take over the coaching duties on Monday. He will drill the men hard in an effort to get the team into shape for the next game which is scheduled for January 17, with the Walkertown High School team. Coach Enright was at the game last night and seemed pleased with the showing of the team, admitting that practice was all that was needed to produce a high-scoring outfit. Besides Weathers, he will have Jones and McCachren, two stellar guards, and Minor and McGlenn, both rangy aspirants for the center position. For the guard positions, besides Jones and McCachren, there are Poe, Harris and Webster.

So far nine games have been listed for the Tar Babies while several more games with High Schools and also a trip through Virginia is being planned. Below is a list of the games which have been listed to date:
