Senate Approves Measure To Combine Three State Schools

BILL NOW GOES BACK TO HOUSE

Opportunity for Saving Is Principal Point in Favor of Bill's Passage.

SCORE BROOKINGS REPORT

The administration bill to consolidate State College and the woman's college at Greensboro with the University was passed Wednesday by the State Senate, after several amendments had been made. Before a final record vote is taken on it, the measure must go back to the lower house for ratification of these amendments. One suggested change in the bill, a proposal to postpone the consolidation until 1933 was defeated by the Senate.

In the eyes of some of the senators, the fact that the consolidation would save the state a considerable amount of expenses in the operation of all three schools seems to be the principal point in its favor.

As the measure now stands, there will be a commission of twelve experts, six to be named by the governor and two each by each of the presidents of the institutions, who are to study the problem of consolidation and report their findings to the board of trustees to be appointed by the 1931 assembly.

The Brookings Institute at Washington has made a report recommending several changes that might be made in the bill. A good many of the senators object to the fact that an institute in Washington should know anything about conditions in North Carolina and therefore is incapable of making any suggestions or criticism.

Senator Baggett, of Harnett, said that he believed that it would be better to preserve the individuality of the schools; to quote him: "I have a number of married children, and it might be more economical to keep them all in one house with me as head, but it would never work."

Summed up the measure provides for a consolidated board of trustees of a hundred members, a commission of twelve to consider the merger plans, and the immediate going into effect of the bill as soon as the House concurs to the several amendments which the Senate has added.

Jack Dungan Is Nominee of Staff

The members of the Daily Tar Heel staff, meeting yesterday afternoon in the office of the publication, unanimously nominated Jack Dungan, present managing-editor, for the position of editor in the coming election on Tuesday, March 31.

Since entering the University Dungan has held the positions of star reporter, assistant-editor, city-editor, and is at present the managing-editor of the Daily Tar Heel. He has served on that publication longer than any person. The bill under discussion was in his class now enrolled in the University, and is the only man to serve two consecutive years as the editor of the Carolina Handbook. Other positions on the campus which Dungan has held include secretary of the Publications Union Board, and president of the Sophomore Y '29-30. He is entirely self-supporting.

Since 1926 the official nominees of the staff who have become editor have been: J. K. Madry, 1926; Jud Ashby, 1927; Walter Spearman, 1928; Glenn Holder, 1929; and Will Yarborough, 1930.

LABOR INJUNCTION IS DISCUSSED BY LEGAL SEMINAR

Experts and Students Present Papers at Meeting Which Is Well Attended.

More than an hundred students, teachers and townspeople attended the law school seminar on administration of justice yesterday morning, at which speakers discussed the desirability and effects upon existing law of proposed legislation recently pending in Congress restricting labor injunctions and contracts by employees not to join a union.

The outside speakers included Professor Duane McCracken, of Guilford College, who, upon the basis of a personal investigation of recent strikes in North Carolina, Virginia and Tennessee, has written a book on "The Strike Injunction in the New South"; Professor H. D. Wolf, of the University department of economics, who has made an extensive study, soon to be printed, of the so-called "Yellow-Dog Contract"; Professor Richard J. Hobbs, of the school of commerce; and Mr. George W. Marshall, of Charlotte, an official of the American Federation of Labor. Attempts to have judge N. A. Townsend, who acted for the Governor during the recent troubles at Gastonia and Marion, present his attitudes, failed because of his engagements with the legislature. Law students who, under the supervision of Professor M. T. Van Hecke, presented papers dealing with different aspects of the matter, included W. W. Johnson, L. J. Giles, R. M. Gray,

UNIVERSITY STUDENT IN CHARGE OF STUDY TOUR

Wallace Kuralt, University student, is in charge of local registration for a recreational and educational tour which will start from Chapel Hill June 10 for visits to California, Great Lakes, the Canadian Rockies and intermediate points, returning here about August 8. This tour, which is being conducted by the Atlantic and Pacific Tours, is particularly attractive to Virginia teachers, since they will be given certificate credit for making the trans-continental trip.

Recommending it for University students, a faculty member here says: "My experience as instructor on a study tour has proved to me that for those with eager minds, transcontinental travel, under such trained guidance as this trip promises, is of great value, undoubtedly of far greater value than the usual summer school experience."

DEBATERS MEET EMORY TONIGHT

C. D. Wardlaw and J. A. Wilkinson to Represent Carolina on Free Trade Question.

The debating teams of Carolina and Emory University, Georgia, will meet tonight at eight-thirty o'clock to debate the proposition, Resolved: That the United States adopt the policy of free trade. The debate will take place in Gerrard hall, and Carolina will defend the negative side of the question.

The men representing Carolina are C. D. Wardlaw and J. A. Wilkinson. Due to illness Hamilton Hobgood, who intended to debate, will not participate.

The query used for the debate has been the popular proposition this year and has been debated frequently, since the inter-collegiate debating tournament this spring has selected it. Carolina does not enter the tournament, but has argued the question with several colleges which wished to practice for the coming tournament.

For the past eight years Carolina has engaged the debating team of Emory with the exception of 1929 when the proposition, Resolved: That the United States should enter the world court without restriction, was cancelled. Last year the question was Resolved: That modern science tends to destroy theistic faith, and Carolina took the affirmative.

STUDENT SOCIAL CONFERENCE WILL CONVENE APRIL 6

Five Men to Represent the University at Goldsboro Meeting.

Five men will represent the University at the annual meeting in Goldsboro of the North Carolina Social Service Conference. The student division of the conference is scheduled to meet April 6, 7, 8.

Last year the conference was held in Charlotte with a large number in attendance. Governor O. Max Gardner was the principal speaker of the occasion.

The fundamental purpose of the conference is to help the students of North Carolina colleges to understand the social conditions in their own state and to have them lend their support to the conference in its program of ameliorating these conditions.

In the past this conference has lived up to these ideals by doing such things as influencing the passage of laws such as the workmen's compensation act and other acts regulating women workers. Various progressive prison reform bills were materially furthered by this organization, also.

The present officers of the student division are: Eloise Banning, president; Beverly Moore, of the University, vice-president; Christine Rosebro, secretary; and H. F. Comer of the campus Y. M. C. A., advisor.
