

RAMSAY TRACES CAMPUS POLITICS IN RADIO SPEECH

Declares Future Leaders in State Get Training From University Political Factions.

"Students at the University of North Carolina learn the theories of political science and government from their history professors, but it is not theories alone they learn at the University. Campus politics gives them a practical slant on this business of selecting capable men to administer student government," stated K. C. Ramsay, retired president of the Publications Union Board, in his talk over WPTF yesterday in which he gave a "History of Politics at the University."

The speaker called attention to the fact that the University has sent out some of the ablest political thinkers and leaders of the state and nation. James K. Polk, twice president of the Di society, first got his taste of politics at the University. It was this taste that carried him to the highest position in the country.

Other men, alumni of the University who were prominent in campus politics before 1900, were William Rufus King, David L. Swain, John M. Morehead, Zebulon B. Vance, Charles B. Aycock, and many others.

He also mentioned a number of the twentieth century campus leaders among whom were President Frank Graham, Edward K. Graham, and Judge John J. Parker.

Beginning with the pre-World War days, Ramsay stated that campus politics was a fight between the several classes including the fraternity and non-fraternity groups. The retired president of the Publications Union Board went on to say that during

Di And Phi Discuss Single Bill Apiece

The Phi and Di societies met at their halls Tuesday night at 7:15, discussing one measure each.

The Phi, after much deliberation, passed the bill, Resolved: That the present prohibition act should be modified so as to legalize the sale of light wines and beers. Representatives Carmichael, Stallings, Greer, Kelly, Simons, and Brown attacked prohibition and favored the legalization of light wines and beers. Representatives Whittenton and Barnhill argued against the bill.

Speaker Haywood congratulated Representatives Atwood, Whittenton and Worth on their work on the dance committee which worked out the plans for the Phi dance given May 2.

The Di Senate discussed the bill, Resolved: That all candidates for degrees at the University be made to qualify according to a certain fixed standard in at least four sports. Senators Medford and Malone favored the resolution while Senators Dungan, Deitz, and Little spoke against the measure. The bill was defeated by a large vote.

After much discussion about the election of a treasurer for the Di, the members selected a treasurer for the coming college year. Charles G. Rose was chosen to fill this position.

At this session Winfield Blackwell and Arthur Valk were elected to membership.

Emerson Gill

Emerson Gill, who will play for the set of three dances sponsored by the May Frolic which will take place this week-end.

COLORFUL PLANS MADE FOR FROLIC

Dances, Houseparties, and Banquets Are Set for Festive Week-end.

With the weather man promising a fair week-end, the campus is preparing to celebrate the second annual May Frolic, which will take place Friday and Saturday of this week.

An unusual brand of music will be furnished for the occasion by Emerson Gill and his Columbia recording orchestra who is now broadcasting from the Bamboo Gardens in Cleveland over station WTAM.

The festivities will be sponsored by the following fraternities: Delta Kappa Epsilon, Sigma Alpha Epsilon, Kappa Sigma, Beta Theta Pi, Zeta Psi, Sigma Nu, and Sigma Chi, and will be composed of three dances in the Tin Can, and one in Durham. The dances in Chapel Hill will be Friday night, Saturday afternoon, and Saturday night. There will be a luncheon dance at the Washington Duke hotel Saturday from 1:30 to 3:00.

The "13" Club will be hosts at a twilight dance Friday at 7:00, immediately following their banquet.

The Minotaurs will present their annual banquet Friday night, and the Order of the Sheiks will give one Saturday night at 6:30.

Gala Week-end

Elaborate plans have been made for a gala week-end of festivities which will only be rivalled by the Finals. The Tin Can has been secured to insure ample room for dancing, and will be decorated for the occasion by Breen, Greene, and Albright, ballroom decorators. Black and white will be the motif, and the building will be divided into sections; one large space in the center for dancing, the end away from the entrance will be the tea garden, and along the left hand side upon entering will be seating space, with each fraternity represented in the Frolic having a separate section. The orchestra will be placed on the right. Evergreens will adorn the entrance.

There will be many entertainments outside the dances, including buffet suppers, swimming and horseback parties. Sigma Chi will be host at a buffet supper Saturday evening at 8:00 while Kappa Sigma will have one after the dance that night.

Four Dances

The annual Virginia-Carolina baseball game will take place

F. J. Gorman Finds Sentiment Of Universities Favors Labor Unions

Trade Organizer and Human Relations Institute Speaker Tells Story of His Rise in Trade Work to Position as Vice-President of National Body.

"I find the attitude of college students very favorable to labor and labor organization," Francis J. Gorman, first vice-president of the United Textile Workers, who spoke at one of the main lectures and two seminars of the Human Relations Institute in an interview yesterday.

Gorman went on to maintain that he had spoken at a number of universities throughout the country in connection with the duties of his office. At every college, he said, he was well received and students in general seemed to be greatly interested in the question of labor organization.

In the South, the Institute lecturer stated, the general attitude is favorable also. This was not true, however, several years ago; but within the last two years, there has been a marked decrease in opposition to organization, Gorman has noted.

Gorman is considered one of the leading textile organizers of the country. At present he is vice-president of the national organization of his trade, an office to which he was elected by representatives of textile workers throughout the country.

He was born in England but came to this country when thirteen and went to work in mills of Rhode Island, where he became active in the union.

When asked yesterday why he was a labor organizer, he gave the history of his connection with labor organizations. At the time he entered the mill, he said, he joined the union because it was part of his trade. He became active in the work of the union and received several honors; he was sent several times to national conventions after being concerned in a dispute and there gained national prominence. Since his election as vice-president, his work has carried him all over the country.

Reasons for Unions

Later on in the interview, Gorman pointed out the fact that mill workers join together just as do college students in their clubs, fraternities, and other social groups. This is done for two reasons, he said; the first was that it is natural for a man to band with other men of his kind and interests; and the second that the individual can obtain better advancement by group organization.

Columbia Spectator Fights For Rights Of Student Body Opinion

Northern Daily Founded in 1873 Upholds Traditions of Self Government in Questions Arising Over Campus Matters and Faculty Control.

(By Bob Woerner)

(The following is the third in series offered by the DAILY TAR HEEL as testimonial to the successful development and influence of some of the leading college daily newspapers throughout the country.)

The Columbia Daily Spectator is the only college daily in the country which employs the unusual gothic type in its heads. Few, if any, papers have done as much for their respective institutions as this publication has.

The editors of the Spectator have adopted the plan of editors of many other student papers when they have tried to crystallize that indefinite something which is vaguely spoken of as student opinion. Often they have been the pioneers in some idea which they continually put before the student body until it has come to be considered the opinion of the students themselves.

The editors of the Spectator have assumed the roles of stewards and catered to campus whims, using their columns as the medium for expression of student opinion. In a few cases, Spectator, in presenting ideals that emanate solely from its editorials, has been successful in attaining them.

Plays Other Publications

The attitude of the Spectator towards its fellow publications in the college has generally been a very critical one. Both the old Columbian, the literary magazine, and the Jester, the humorous magazine, were continuously flayed. The attitudes taken by the editorials may be characterized as fair in their general tenor, but as tending either completely to ridicule or wholeheartedly to praise the work done by other publications.

One of the greatest agitations which ever shook the Columbia

Staff Meeting

A special call meeting of the reportorial staff of the Daily Tar Heel will take place this afternoon at 5:00 o'clock in 104 Alumni building. All students expecting to work on the paper next year are requested to be present, as no regular tryouts are planned for next fall. The managing editor will announce a new assignment of beats. There will be beats available for fifteen new reporters at this meeting.

STUDENT COUNCIL EXPLAINS ACTION

Albright Declares New Council Will Punish Violators of Campus Code.

In order to clarify recent action of the student council, Mayne Albright, president of the student union, offers the following explanation.

"In dealing with the various cases which arise, the student council considers an offense against honor much more serious than any breach of conduct. The council considers offenses which reflect discredit upon the University to be of a more serious nature than any case which concerns the private morals of any individual student.

"The new council has, in its last two meetings, dealt with a case which involved violations of honor, and actions which were endangering the good name of the University. The action taken was the only one possible in the opinion of the council. That five students were suspended from the University in one case was a regrettable necessity. Our student government prides itself on the fact that it deals with each case on its individual merits and is not bound by written law; but for violations of the honor system, i. e. lying, cheating, and stealing, the council has but one course—suspension.

"It has come to the attention of the council that there has been some counterfeiting of dance tickets lately. The council considers an act of this kind to be in direct conflict to the principles of honor and of gentlemanly conduct, and sincerely trusts that no instance of such action will arise.

"Tentative date for administrative meetings have been set as follows: Student Activities committee, May 14; annual awards night ceremony, May 21.

"The Graham Memorial committee, which consists of students, faculty, and alumni representatives, has begun its work of organizing the student union building, and will report its work through the columns of this paper. The student union program will be the keynote of the Student Activities committee meeting this spring."

(Signed) R. M. Albright,
President Student Union.
Council Makes Stand

Since the new council has taken over the administration of student government it has been found necessary to discipline a number of students at the University for violation of the Carolina man's creed of honor and moral conduct.

This fact occasions mention at this time that the new regime does not intend to be more than extraordinarily critical of the conduct of the students but

UNIVERSITY GETS VALUABLE GIFTS FOR COLLECTION

Matthew Gilmour Donates Rare Egyptian Relics for Archaeological Display.

An unrolled and unidentified Egyptian papyrus has been presented to the University by M. P. Gilmour, it was announced yesterday by J. P. Harland of the department of archaeology. Gilmour is a senior in the department of archaeology, where he became interested in the University's work along that line and decided to make the gift as a nucleus for a future collection.

Along with the papyrus he has given a string of beads, a "sacred beetle" (scarab) of faience, also a bronze mirror, and a piece of wood with a long mace-shaped compartment hollowed out of it. The papyrus is contained in this hollow, although the wooden receptacle may have served originally as a holder for some other object.

These articles were acquired by Gilmour's grandfather when he visited Egypt more than forty years ago.

Book of the Dead

As yet, the roll, which is several feet long, has not been unrolled; consequently, it has not been identified, but it is thought that it is a so-called "Book of the Dead."

Prior to the year 2000 B. C., magical formulae by which the deceased could escape the dangers of the next world and directions for the ba, or soul, and the scá, or the spiritual double, were written on the inside of the wooden coffin in which the mummy lay. There the formulae and directions became so lengthy that there was not

Medal Contestants Asked To Report

Seniors intending to compete in the Mangum Medal contest should see Professor George McKee in his office in 210 Murphey hall at once, so that arrangements for the preliminary contest may be made.

The Mangum Medal, which was founded by the Misses Mangum, late of Orange County, in memory of their father, Willie Person Mangum, class of 1815, and is continued by his granddaughter, Mrs. Stephen B. Weeks, and his great-grandson, Julian Turner, is awarded to the member of the senior class delivering the best oration at commencement.

The winner of the Mangum Medal in the graduating class of 1930 was John Albert Lang, now a graduate student.

Tapping Tonight

Tau Beta Pi, national engineering honorary scholastic fraternity, will tap for the second time this year at 8:00 tonight in Phillips hall. The men eligible are seniors and rising seniors.

Membership in this society is one of the highest honors which an engineering student can attain as it corresponds to the Phi Beta Kappa and Sigma Xi in other fields. The local chapter, Beta, was founded in 1928.

Infirmiry List

There were but two confined to the infirmiry yesterday. They were Miss Frances Hampton and Joseph T. Wilson, Jr.
