NORTH Carolina and Duke were both ready last night to meet in their annual encounter today at Duke stadium. The kickoff is scheduled for 2:00 o'clock.

After a week of working behind locked doors, the Devils completed their last drills late yesterday afternoon and today the gates will be thrown open at 12:30 o'clock to prepare for the onrush of spectators that are expected to attend North Carolina's greatest football attraction.

The two teams were in the best of condition after their week's work. The Tar Heels will have back in play their star tackle, June Underwood, whose presence will bolster the Carolina line. There is also the possibility that Frank Smith, injured early in the season, will see service if he is needed.

The Devils, too, are about free from injuries. Bert Friedman, star guard, who was kept out of the State game due to injuries will be available, although there is doubt if he will start. Tom Rogers, reserve end, is also expected to be able to play after a week of resting the injury he sustained in last week's battle.

What the Blue Devils have done in practice sessions this week is a mystery, but they have been on the field daily and are said to have put in a great amount of hard work. Coach Wallace Wade is expected to have something up his sleeve when the two teams trot out on the turf today.

While personal battles at every post are expected to be brilliant features, the main highlight will be in the running of Rip Slusser of Carolina and Captain Kid Brewer of Duke.

At both schools, the grand finale for today's game was gigantic pep rallies. "Beat Duke" signs were all over the Carolina campus while "Beat the Tar Heels" were prominent in Durham. At the pep rally here last night, the students were entertained by the band, and were spoken to by Mr. Bob House, and other celebrities. After the rally, the students put on a colorful "snake dance" through town.

The passenger used to worry about catching a train. Nowadays it's the train that worries about catching a passenger.

The grid menu this week will be sort of lean; most of the leading teams are fattening up for their Turkey Day spectacle. Of the games that are being played today, Carolina-Duke, Harvard-Yale, Notre Dame-Southern California, Florida-Tech and State-South Carolina lead the field. However, the real thrillers of the season comes Thursday.

Carolina-Duke
Although the glamour that surrounds a state championship battle will be gone, there'll be enough excitement in this game to keep tongues wagging for many a moon. This is the game the North State has been waiting for, and it won't be disappointed. It looks like the Devils will have to repeat that "next year" stuff with the Tar Heels playing the way they are. Carolina on the long end of a 13-6 score.

State-South Carolina
The Gamecocks have already taken a decision from a North Carolina team and Uncle Billy Laval's boys should make it two in a row even though the Wolfpack is the talk of the Conference. Clipper Smith shot his bolt against Duke and South Carolina ought to have easy pickings with the Wolfpack's remains. South Carolina by about two.

Florida-Tech
The other "natural" of the circuit. The Tornado will be out to avenge a 52-7 beating suffered last year, and with Florida in its weakened condition, Tech ought to come through with a close decision.

Notre Dame-Trojans
Orville Mohler will lead a pack of high scoring, smashing backs against that stalwart Notre Dame line, and what a battle it'll be. It's going to be hard to find two teams more evenly matched. Don't be surprised in a 7-7 tie.

Harvard-Yale
Another duel between Barry Wood and Albie Booth, and again it looks as if the Harvard boy will come out on top. However, Booth will be mighty dangerous, especially since he won't have to go by Ben Ticknor. If Booth gets on the loose, it'll be curtains for the Bostonians. However, we'll string along and pick Harvard by two touchdowns.

YOUNG DISCUSSES CHARITY GAMES

Chiefs of the three great news services and the sports editors and sport columnists met Tuesday with Owen D. Young, chairman of the committee on mobilization of relief resources. Their discussion was of plans for the emergency relief football games for which Young issued a call not long ago.

One hundred and thirty-one colleges have responded to Young's call. Of these, fifty-six have completed arrangements for special games and fifty-seven others are making arrangements. Some of these will give the net proceeds and the others will give a percentage of the proceeds of one regular game. Reports are not complete of high school and preparatory school plans, but many are being arranged and it is probable that they may exceed in number those to be played by colleges.

Some of the colleges will play special games and the others will donate from the proceeds of a regular game. The University of North Carolina is planning for a special game.

CANDIDATES FOR BOXING SHOWING IMPROVED FORM

Hudson and Raymer Are Overcoming Early Injuries and Look Like First Stringers.

Injuries to some of the most prominent candidates and the extra attention given those out for the intramural tournament, have put the activity of the varsity boxing candidates at a low level this week, but the return of Paul Hudson and Furches Raymer indicates some hard work for the prospective first stringers following the Thanksgiving holidays.

Raymer, who has been confining his practice sessions to shadow boxing and work on the heavy bag for the past month on account of a broken thumb, has practically recovered and is taking the regular workouts every day now. He is a lightweight this year, but was undefeated in the featherweight division last winter.

Paul Hudson, went into the ring this week for the first time since suffering a cracked breast bone early in the fall. During the past week, Hudson sparred a few rounds each day with Archie Allen, frosh coach, and showed signs of regaining the form that made him the best welterweight prospect in school last year.

Marty Levinson continues the center of interest for ringside observers. The veteran featherweight is hitting harder than ever this year and is showing more speed than usual.

Jimmy Williams, who divided bantamweight duties with Cliff Glover on the freshman squad last winter, has been improving rapidly during the past month and is showing the best form of any man in his class. Glover has been working irregularly this fall and has not been able to get himself into good condition, but his work has been promising at times.

CAVALIERS HAVE HIGH SPIRIT FOR TAR HEEL GAME

Offense of Virginia Team Against V. P. I. Gives Backers Hope for Victory.

"Will the new found strength of the Virginia football team be sufficient to win from North Carolina in Chapel Hill on Thanksgiving?"

This is the question that is being asked by the followers of the Cavaliers, those who saw the thrilling offense against V. P. I. and those who have only heard or read accounts of the magnificent play of the Virginians.

Good Against V. P. I.

Not in years has Virginia gone on the field with an attack so well balanced as that used against V. P. I. There were off-tackle thrusts, line crashes, end runs and forward passes. There were trick plays, a modified "Statue of Liberty" on which Ward Brewer got away for a long run, and the revival of an ancient device in which Herbert Bryant, former fullback, swung out of his guard position and went around right end for 20 yards.

Superb defensive play on the part of three Tech linemen, Harry Stark, Gene Hite, and Captain Gene Brown did more than their share.—(Continued on next page)

Late Notice

Coach Chuck Collins announced last night that Johnny Branch, quarterback, will be reinstated to the football squad Monday and will be able to play the Thanksgiving game with Virginia.

'New Yorker' Wants New Football Heads

Newspaper sports editors would do well to adopt the suggestion made in the current New Yorker regarding football headlines. It makes your head swim to read football headlines, the nomenclature is so devious. "Crimson Tide Swamps Dolphins." It sounds like an eerie trick of nature, not a grid contest. "Lions Rip Gophers' Defense." Obviously a zoo story.

The teams should be rechristened, and instead of naming them for a lot of dumb animals, the colleges should name them for famous alumni, whose names would carry some meaning to the average reader. We are sick of seeing "Bulldog and Tiger Deadlocked, 0-0." We should prefer to read that the "Valees and Haliburtons Battle to a Scoreless Tie."
