ALUMNI INTEREST IN LOAN FUND IS PROVED BY HELP

Business Office Hopes for $25,000
In Repayments, Which Have Increased.

Many towns and organizations throughout North Carolina and in other states as well are now participating in an enthusiastic drive to boost the student loan fund. Definite organization among the alumni of the University is well under way in over fifteen cities and towns, according to the office of the alumni secretary.

Committees Formed

The number of people attending the meetings of alumni attest the whole-hearted support accorded this movement. In Washington, D. C., approximately one hundred people were present at the gathering for the purpose of electing officers, while in Greensboro, Durham, and Winston-Salem committees were formed to solicit the alumni. Goldsboro claimed the greatest number present in proportion to the number of alumni. Raleigh has set up committees and is already canvassing the city, while organizations in Charlotte have been equally as speedy. In addition to these towns, High Point, Rocky Mount, Richmond, Wilmington, Fayetteville, and Wilson have all begun activity in favor of the student loan fund, and Philadelphia and Lumberton have organized alumni clubs.

P. T. A. Contributes

The drive for the loan fund has been carried on not only by men but by women as well, for several organizations such as the D. A. R. and Y. W. C. A. have pledged support to the need of the University. The state organization of parents and teachers under the leadership of Mrs. Lionel Weil of Goldsboro has also

James S. Manning Has Fought For Rights Of Carolinians Since 1907

Prominent State Politician, Member of the First Four-Year Class After Re-Opening of University, Is Executive Committee Member of Board of Trustees.

For thirty-three years a trustee of the University and now a member of the executive committee of the board of trustees, James S. Manning of Raleigh is widely known as one who has rendered justice and fought for the rights of North Carolinians, both in the courts and on the floors of the state legislature.

Together with Dr. J. M. Manning of Durham, Judge Francis D. Winston, and Judge Robert W. Winston, all of who have become prominent in the life of the state, J. S. Manning was one of the two pairs of brothers to graduate in 1879 as members of the first four-year class after the re-opening of the University in 1875. He was one of the group of alumni recently elected to Phi Beta Kappa, there being no chapter of the honorary fraternity here during his college career.

State Senator

Manning began the practice of law in Durham in 1883. He was elected to the state house of representatives in 1907, and in 1909 he became state senator. From 1909 to 1916 he served as a justice on the North Carolina Supreme Court, resigning upon his election as state attorney general in 1916. He was re-elected in 1920 and served until 1925. He was president of the Wake county bar association from 1916 to 1920.

While attorney general, Manning drafted a bill for the regulation of bus traffic in the state. The bill attracted wide notice and has proven successful in its operations. Provisions were made for the taxation of busses on their net receipts, compulsory insurance to cover loss of property and life due to accidents, and examinations for all bus drivers before receiving their licenses.

In State Politics

For years an important figure in state politics, Manning is a loyal Democrat. In 1930 he was campaign manager of Josiah W. Bailey in his successful contest with Senator F. M. Simmons for the office of United States senator. He was in 1928 head of the Democratic party machinery as chairman of the advisory committee.

He has been a loyal trustee of the University, and in public life he has always been an influential proponent of the institution. His son, Colonel John M. Manning of Durham, is also a trustee.

Faculty, And Not Students, Read 'Trashy' Magazines, Survey Shows

Students Prefer National Weeklies, According to Results Obtained in Check on Three Local Stores Having Variety of Magazines for Sale.

Members of the University faculty, and not students crave the so-called "trashy" magazines sold in Chapel Hill. Students prefer the national weeklies. This information came in a survey of what students and faculty members read conducted in three local magazine stores.

Operators of the magazine stands, which display a large number of the contemporary periodicals, stated that students avoided stories usually termed "trash" and magazines called "pulp" (so named from the cheap paper on which they are printed). These magazines, it is said, are profitable in their sale to townspeople and members of the faculty.

The national weeklies, Liberty, Collier's, and Saturday Evening Post, are popular with the students, while The American Magazine is the most widely demanded monthly publication. Motion picture magazines are widely read by the student body which averages a movie attendance of two and one-half shows a week. These magazines are also favored by the faculty.

Review of Reviews, Harper's, Scribner's, and American Mercury, considered magazines of the better class, are sold to students and faculty members equally, while students buy the majority of news magazines.

Love magazines and sex stories are taboo as far as students are concerned, the storekeepers say. Their sale is virtually limited to the negroes of the town.

Members of the student body, it has been observed, ridicule the detective story, refuse action thrillers, and seldom demand the weird, supernatural, horrible, or pseudo-scientific articles. At one stand practically no students buy action stories, but the clerks admitted a profitable sale to University instructors. Another storekeeper commented that the "trashy" magazines were bought chiefly by faculty members and townspeople, student purchases being almost negligible. The third estimated that his sales of cheap magazines were practically evenly divided between students and faculty and townspeople.

Miss Co-ed prefers The Woman's Home Companion and Vogue and, with all sophistication, avoids the "love" magazines. She purchases The American Magazine frequently, and for her humor, relies upon College Humor, ignoring The New Yorker which the men students prefer more than all others of the same type.
