UNIVERSITY LAW SCHOOL ENROLLMENT INCREASED

Classes began Friday morning in the University law school, which formally opened with an enrollment of 110 students. This number is a slight increase over the enrollment at this time a year ago, and with the usual number of late registrations this quarter it is probable that the law school will have a larger number of students than it had last year.

Says Debate Is One-Sided

The governor spoke before a crowd of 12,000 people.

solidated institution will operate under one director of summer schools. There will also be only one director of extension, beginning in the academic year of 1932.

Certain changes have likewise been made in the allocation of functions in the Greater University. The training of all elementary school teachers shall be transferred to Greensboro with the 1933-34 season, whereas the training of all librarians will be moved to Chapel Hill, abolishing the library department at Greensboro.

State to Be Transferred

Most drastic of the transfers advocated by the survey committee, but as yet unratified, is the transfer of State college from Raleigh to Chapel Hill. The committee in making this recommendation advocated the making of provisions for leaving a program of general education carried through the junior-college level at Raleigh.

In all transfers the committee recommends that the removal should be gradual. In the case of State college this will be done by not admitting freshmen to abolished departments, and in the training of teachers in Greensboro by not admitting students at Greensboro in the junior year.

Throughout the recommendations of the committee wherever possible preference has been given to Chapel Hill. It advocated that when the state resources permit the erection of new buildings, the first funds be spent on the development of the engineering plant at Chapel Hill with the idea of transferring the engineering work.

The adoption by the board of these recommendations is indicative of the unified outlook on the needs of the state which Governor Gardner so urged in his address to the General Assembly. "Our problem," he said, "is to view the entire higher educational effort of this state in terms of trends extending over generations and to direct these trends into channels which will prevent waste and insure to the rising generations the best training we can provide."

G. T. Winston, Former President Here, Was Educational Leader

gave him familiar acquaintance with the teachers of the state. His scholarly addresses, some of which were published gave him a high standing among cultured men. He had boundless energy, vigorous health, and a bold spirit, which feared nothing and was appalled by no obstacles...

Advances University

Crippled by the enforced closing, the University had an enrollment of only 198 students. Dr. Winston determined to increase the number and had placed at his disposal sixty free scholarships. By dissemination of circulars and personal speaking tours, in five years he increased the student body to 462. He also secured an appreciable increase over the $30,000 which had been the state grant to the University at the opening of his term of office.

While president Dr. Winston took a crusading interest in the moral and scholastic standing of his institution. A life-long prohibitionist, he was highly instrumental in the punishment of violators of the law which forbade the sale of liquor within four miles of the campus. Ever democratic and liberal, he sought to quell fraternity and non-fraternity bitterness by ruling that fraternity men could not be pledged until the fall of their sophomore year. This regulation, incidentally, continued for several years after Dr. Winston had been president.

His entire administration was a constant struggle for a greater University. That he won such a large measure of success was undoubtedly due to his personal zeal. He continually emphasized the opinion that "the University is the best property the state owns, that it educates many poor boys who otherwise could not get an education, and that many other states, notably Virginia and South Carolina were appropriating larger sums for their state universities."

President at Texas

At the end of five years Dr. Winston resigned to become head of the new University of Texas. He remained there from 1896 to 1899 and figured prominently in laying the foundation for the great University of the southwest.

In 1899 he assumed his third and last presidency by becoming president of State college. In the seven years which he served there Dr. Winston employed the same progressive and fearless tactics which marked him as one of the nation's educational leaders.

Back to Chapel Hill

His last years were spent as an invalid in the town which he knew and loved so well, Chapel Hill. Even when he was stricken with a mortal illness his interest in the University remained keenly alive. The friendship between Dr. Winston and Dr. M. C. S. Noble during the former final years was one of the most beautiful ever witnessed at the University.

His death last August elicited wide-spread eulogies, notable of which were those from President Graham and Josephus Daniels, Raleigh editor. Daniels wrote "He was the first of those men of new spirit in southern education who built on broader lines at the University of North Carolina and North Carolina State college. In Texas, as president, he performed a similar high service."

President Graham referred to Dr. Winston as "a casualty of the life militant, champion of religious freedom and educational democracy who synthesized the classical and the scientific, the cultural and the vocational in his own varied and brilliant life."

Just enough Turkish — that's another reason you Enjoy them more

Turkish tobacco is the "seasoning" in Cigarettes

THE difference between food that tastes just right and food that doesn't is often a matter of proper seasoning.

It's the same with a cigarette. Too much Turkish tobacco like too little will often spoil the fine balance of mildness and flavor you want in your smoke.

Chesterfield's milder, better taste is the result of blending and cross-blending high-grade Domestic tobaccos with just the right amount of spicy aromatic Turkish. That's why Chesterfields are milder, why they taste better.
