Out of The Red

After two years as an "experiment" THE DAILY TAR HEEL last year proved its worthiness to be continued regularly when the final audit for 1931-32 showed a profit of over $1,000.

Publishing a paper six times a week in a town no larger than 2700 persons, and making a profit in doing so, is a business enterprise which necessitates careful budgeting and level-headed management.

Now that this paper is for the first time really on its feet, the national as well as the local advertisers will be much more willing to contribute ads.

THE DAILY TAR HEEL is out of the red. Its permanency has been definitely established. In the next few years it will not only be able to begin publication in a smaller and more standard type, but will also be able to hire an Associated Press wire—both of which will add much to THE TAR HEEL's usefulness and development.

The Lion and The Lamb

Mahatma Gandhi has won another victory. Exactly what were the terms upon which India's saint was recently able to agree with the British government has not been disclosed but the fact is that, rather than permit him to carry his fast to the bitter end, Ramsay MacDonald as foreign minister has made some concession, the news of which the Mahatma greeted with, "Satyagraha (soul force) has conquered."

This recent episode in India's history shows again the difference in the working of the English mind and that of the Indian. Mr. MacDonald had worked out what he considered a satisfactory solution to the problem of representation under India's new constitution. As a practical statesman he thought that if the untouchables were to receive any fair representation in the Indian Congress and in the provincial assemblies they would have to be segregated legally, as they were socially, into a separate electorate.

Gandhi, by such acts as his recent fasting, has initiated a tremendous emotional force not only in India but over the entire world. His principles and his spirit have so captivated people's minds that public opinion everywhere is back of him.

The Greeks Redeem Themselves

In yesterday's TAR HEEL there appeared an article in which it was mentioned that Tau Epsilon Phi fraternity had won the scholarship trophy cup for the national fraternity with the highest scholastic average on the campus.

This fact simply illustrates one of the most debatable subjects on the campus: Are fraternity houses conducive to studying? Taking the average for all the fraternities and comparing it with that of the non-fraternity group, it will probably be found that the fraternity group has as high, if not a higher average than the non-fraternity.

One of the most important questions in the life of a "would-be" fraternity man after his pledging is whether he is going to live at the fraternity house or not. The general custom is to have the new men stay at least one term at the house. Usually there are a few men in the pledge group who are very much interested in making good grades.

The splendid showing that the fraternity men made last year in scholastic achievements clearly illustrates the fact that fraternities do not apparently hinder the efforts of the studious, but are perhaps conducive to study.

Enrollment Shows Increase
The total enrollment of the schools in Chapel Hill at the end of the third week was 658, fifty more than were enrolled last year. There are 268 in the high school with forty-two in the senior class.

OUR TIMES

By Don Shoemaker

Against Odds

A contributing factor in the diminished roll of the freshman class year has been the opening of the women's branch of the University, Greensboro's erstwhile N. C. C. W., to men students. Greensboro males seeking a higher education find it more economical to attend the Women's Division, from whence they will derive a diploma from the University of North Carolina, just as though they had attended the Chapel Hill branch.

So, dog-eared old N. C. C. W.'s The Carolinian in its first edition of September 29: "Welcome, Co-eds!"

Revolution

Often have perspiring college newspapermen and freshman English theme writers struck "anf" for "and," "thw" for "the," and other similar combinations in their efforts to peck out contributions to the enlightenment of the race on the most provoking of machine age contraptions, the typewriter.

For Dr. August Dvorak of the University of Washington has discovered a new keyboard combination in arrangement of letters that will reduce awkward combinations and subsequent misspellings from 10,500,000 to 1,500,000. The standard four-bank keyboard is responsible for more than ten million awkward combinations, but the new one, which will place most of the key letters A, O, E, U, I, D, H, T, N, in the middle line or home position of the machine, makes it nearly impossible to produce any word with either the right or left hand alone.

THOSE NEW BOOKS

On these cool mornings doesn't it feel good to creep close to a cheerily blazing fire? We are thankful for the one in our shop. That and a warming chuckle from, More Merry-Go-Round is the supreme combination.

Warwick Deeping's latest, Smith, has been added this week to the lending library of The Bull's Head.

Thomas Wolfe is alleged to have a new novel coming out this fall. It was announced first as October Fair, then as K-19. Now it appears that both titles have been rejected and that both publisher and author are open for suggestion.

V. F. Calverton, The Liberation of American Literature. New York: Scribner's ($3.75). Reviewed by Thomas B. Stroup. V. F. Calverton has written a most valuable and stimulating book on American literature—

The Ink Well

By Nelson Robbins

Words . . . Letters . . . Mattered oaths . . . Stench of perspiration and dead cigarettes . . . Reporters bumping into each other . . . The click of typewriters . . . Headline writers seeking . . . groping for words . . . finding . . . counting . . . discarding . . . Blood-chilling blasphemy . . . Copy boys hurrying to and fro . . . The jangle of a telephone . . . The snipping of copy-readers' shears . . . A temporary lull . . . A low, grumbling undertone . . . The whirl of gigantic machinery getting into motion . . . The paper goes to press.

Fond Memories: Carrying a young boulder to place on the old freshman rock pile at Gimghoul . . . Summer school dances . . . Week-ends at Greensboro . . . Passing freshman English . . . That high school sweetheart . . .

"Come to Carolina, in the summer time" . . . When the University looks more like N. C. C. W. . . . When there are two dances a week . . . And plenty and culture as well, for that matter. He has attempted to analyze the social forces in American life from the beginnings up to the present time and to show how the changing environment has affected the corpus of our literature. Though he sees the social structure eternally reflecting itself in literature, Calverton reminds us that it is more than mere reflection: the literary artist is a creative part of his environment, and through him in large measure the environment.
