

GRAHAM'S SPEECH HEARD BY HI-Y IN ANNUAL SESSION

President Tells Youth That They Have Privilege in Chance To Rebuild World.

"You young men have the greatest opportunity ever offered a generation to rebuild the world," declared Dr. Frank P. Graham, president of the University, at the closing session last Saturday of the second annual Carolinas' Hi-Y Congress at Raleigh. "This generation lives in the midst of a great transition, unlike any which the world has experienced in many years. Every generation brings a transition, but only seldom does one of this magnitude appear."

Urges Brotherhood

Dr. Graham made a strong appeal to the some three score young delegates to make their organization one of international brotherhood, both in fact as well as ideals. Never has there been a time when the need for this force has been more needed, he said. The speaker gave a vivid illustration of his point by showing the world as highly organized mechanically, resulting in the formation of a sensitive superstructure, controlled sometimes by relatively small "but-tons." He spoke of the 1929 crash in Wall Street and of the incident in 1914 when a Slavic youth pulled a trigger which did much to bring on the World War. "I don't mean to say that the Wall Street crash caused the depression, or that the shooting of the pistol brought on the World War, but I do mean to say that these incidents released pent up forces, bringing later their terrible results. Thus, you may see, how sensitive is this superstructure at times.

"We need spiritual forces to run through this giant mechanical structure and strengthen it. You young men are living in the

Medical Students Forced To Rob Graves For Specimens In Nineties

Many Ghoulish Stories Told of Pranks Played on Unsuspecting Freshmen by Students in University Medical School; Certain Antics Nearly Closed School.

To awaken in the morning to find lying in bed with you a cold, dead body, clammy and dripping with preservative fluid, would be as frightening an experience now as it was to an unfortunate Carolina freshman of the nineties. Freshmen of this day need have no worry of such practical joking. But alumni still chuckle over the story of how this particular freshman went rushing into the dawn, unclad and shrieking, a victim of prankish "med" students.

Medical students at Carolina in the last century won an unsavory reputation for the gruesome antics of a few of their number. About thirty years ago, says Dr. Isaac Manning, dean of the present medical school, the alleged activities of the prankish medical men were reported by the TAR HEEL in a story which unwittingly nearly closed the medical school. A senator based a successful campaign platform against orgies which students were reputed to perform over bodies procured for experimentation. The ultimate result was state legislation to prohibit study of unclaimed bodies from the state hospital. The law has never been repealed, and is still source of as much annoyance to medical students now as it was then.

Stripped Graves

Necessity of human specimens gave rise to one gruesome story of robbing of graves. Energetic and interested students demanded first hand anatomy study to accompany the lectures by Dr. Richard Whitehead. Dr. Whitehead, who later taught at the University of Virginia, had expressed need of a specimen. When the doctor entered class the following day he noticed an object hidden beneath a canvass on the operating table.

Shrugging his small round shoulders, he spat his tobacco into the corner cuspidor, then cautiously circled the slab. With one curious eye on the table, he began his lecture sans specimen. Curiosity impelled him to throw back the cover. Surprised and delighted students beheld the magnificent physique of a black man, but they shrank with horror from the face, scraped free of all flesh to conceal identification.

Shocked and amazed, Whitehead reproached his class. "I don't know who the poor devil is, nor how he came here, but we had no specimen last night. Grave robbing is a crime. Whoever is responsible, return him." Perplexed students were dismissed. That night the body disappeared and no more has been heard of it.

Ghoulish Comedy

Grim comedy resulted from the following incident. "A gentleman living in Chapel Hill buried his wife a few days ago," announced a professor in physiology one snowy February morning. "The body has been removed from the grave and the man swears he's going to kill every medical student who had anything to do with it. He claims to have tracked a wagon through the snow from the grave to the med building. He's wild with anger and he has a gun. I leave it to you," he said, departing, "to produce the body."

Lawson President of Class

The students hurried with blank and fearful faces to a meeting called by Robert B. Lawson, then president of the class, and now a physician and head of gymnasium instruction here. Every man swore he knew nothing about it. A crazed man out to murder them was to be reckoned with. A flat denial of the whole charge was the only answer, which the students timidly presented to the outraged husband. No students were killed.

Weeks passed with no clues. Then the mystery was suddenly solved. "I hope father never discovers that we removed mother from the old graveyard to our new lot in Durham," the man's daughter was heard to remark.

A general organization meeting of the local chapter of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers will take place tonight at 7:15 o'clock in room 319 Phillips hall. STATE SYMPHONY TO BE CONDUCTED BY PAUL GRANGER

Committee Decides to Send In- vitation to Artist to Act as Guest Leader.

At a meeting of the executive committee of the North Carolina Symphony Society Saturday in Raleigh, it was decided to extend an invitation to Paul Granger to come to North Carolina as a guest conductor at the winter concerts of the state symphony to be conducted in January.

Granger, who is one of America's foremost music artists and composers, had previously announced that he would come if the committee invited him. He has stated that he is very enthusiastic over the work of the North Carolina symphony, and recently said that in his opinion the state was taking a great step forward towards a wider public appreciation of classical and folk music.

Tentative Programs

Colonel Joseph Hyde Pratt, chairman of the committee, announced that plans were being made to include at least one of Granger's own compositions on the series of programs to be played by the symphony. No arrangements were definitely Number Taken in by Organiza- tions Less by Hundred Than Last Year's Figures.

BETAS LEAD IN NUMBER

Further Pledging Will Be Car- ried on Today at 1:30 In Gerrard Hall.

After a rushing season of two weeks, campus Greeks were looking over their crop of neophytes last night which yesterday as pledge day brought to swell their lodges. According to unofficial tabulation 206 freshmen and new men to the campus became pledges, which marks the decrease of ninety as compared with last year's figures.

The shorter rushing season, not allowing decision to be reached, within the regular limit, may have had some effect upon the number of pledges but expense is also seen as a factor.

The proportion of freshmen in school and those going to fraternities is slightly lower when compared with last year.

Further Pledging Today

Irving Boyle, president of the Interfraternity Council, will be in Gerrard hall today at 1:30 o'clock to deliver invitations to those first-year men who did not receive theirs yesterday. All freshman pledging at this time must be handled through the Interfraternity Council or the office of the dean of students for the matter to become official.

Beta Theta Pi, with twenty-one, led the fraternities with the largest number pledged while Phi Gamma Delta, Sigma Nu, and Alpha Tau Omega followed close behind.

THE DAILY TAR HEEL compiled the following list last night, though an exact and full tabulation could not be made at the time:

Delta Kappa Epsilon: William James Berry, Jr., Durham; Jack
