ASSOCIATION OF WOMEN TO MEET

Miss Claudia Hunter, Vocational Director of Henderson, Will Speak This Afternoon.

The Woman's Association of the University will convene in its first meeting this afternoon at 4:00 o'clock in 214' Graham Memorial. Mary Frances Parker, who is president of the association, has asked that all women students be present.

As a special feature on the program, Miss Claudia Hunter, a vocational director of Henderson, will give a short talk on vocations. Miss Hunter will be here all week, during which time she will have conferences with all girls who are seeking vocational guidance. It is her plan to make investigation into the field that each girl wishes to enter and to determine the possibilities of a position in that field. After the meeting, the association will serve tea in the ladies' reception room, after which the game room will be reserved for co-eds for an hour. It is hoped by Mayne Albright, manager of Graham Memorial, that the women students at the University will begin to use the game room more than they have in the past.

Sophomores to Meet

The sophomore class will meet in Memorial hall Thursday night in order to nominate and elect five dance leaders for the sophomore hop.

Library Bans Display Of Political Badges

The wearing of political badges by any of the library force in the University was forbidden yesterday by officials of the library following the appearance of several political buttons on the lapels of members of various departments of the library.

Officials of the library gave as reason for the order that the library was merely following the practice of all the best in the country. The policy is that since the library is a public institution and assistants are servants of the public, it is indefensible to carry on propaganda in such an institution.

JUDGE WINSTON MAKES TALK ON 'THE PARTICULAR'

Brother of G. T. Winston Advises
Students to "Stick to Particular" in Chapel Talk.

R. W. Winston, brother of the late George Tayloe Winston, recently honored by the University, and former lawyer, judge, and legislator spoke to the assembly yesterday morning. Judge Winston who retired at the age of sixty and re-entered the University, is well known as a contributor to several national magazines.

His subject was "The Problem of the Particular." "In daily life," he said, "this could be explained as the question of the deadline of life. When we are born, we are a unit of humanity. As we grow older and our intelligence increases, we branch off in the particular or the individual. We may join a church, a political party, a fraternity, or some particular organization. Then there may be a desire to go into the universe, but it is dangerous to attempt this; we should stick to the particular."

Winston listed several groups of particulars to prove differences in thought. The different churches have different beliefs. There is a group in Germany, about to gain control, who believe that clothes are not appropriate. He also told of a group that think the political form of government of today is wrong, and that we should have a soviet form of government. Judge Winston said that nobody can explain anything, that nothing is explainable but the best a person can do is to mix up a very little of the universal with the particular. He concluded by stating that a person would never go wrong in sticking to the old family traditions.

K. C. Fraser Reviews Activities Of International Arms Conference

University History Professor Finds Hope for Achievement in Armament Parley Despite Complexity of Problems and Issues Involved.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: K. C. Fraser, professor in the University history department, attended the Geneva arms conference during his leave of absence last year. The following article is a personal record of his impressions.)

The first session of the Geneva Arms Conference convened February 2, 1932 and adjourned July 9, 1932. The Arms Conference itself was, contrary to the general impression current in the United States, a very carefully prepared session. Preparations had been made since 1926. The accomplishing of disarmament is a function which was later given to the League of Nations by the terms of the treaties of 1919, and the erecting of ground work of the Conference has been carried on under the auspices of the League of Nations.

Problems which presented themselves at Geneva in the first phase of the Conference were perfectly inevitable because of the differences in the defense requirements of the fifty-five nations represented there.

Varied Plans Offered

Proposals for disarmament were naturally very varied in character, indicating the peculiar interest of each of the states making suggestions, the most radical of which was the proposal made to the plenary session of the Conference for complete and total disarmament immediately. The plan advanced by the Soviet government of Russia is considered in Geneva as too far-reaching and is not taking into consideration the current conditions.

Certain major problems dominated the first session of the Arms Conference. First and probably most important were the apparently irreconcilable positions of France and Germany. France demanded a guarantee of security against foreign attack. There are two alternatives which the French suggested: security under the League of Nations which she felt might be guaranteed by an international police force under the command of the League, or the security which she might find in a great French army. She also maintained as a necessary feature of her security program the absolute observance of the terms of the Versailles Treaty establishing the disarmament of Germany.

Germany Demands Equality

Measured against this was the German position which in brief was based upon the tacit pledge given to Germany under the terms of the peace treaties that the disarmament of Germany was actually the first step toward the general disarmament of the world. Upon this pledge Germany based her demand for armament equality with other nations of the world.

Generally speaking, the majority of the delegates at Geneva admitted the validity of the German contention. On the other hand there was a general recog-

UNIVERSITY GLEE CLUB TO PRESENT INITIAL CONCERT

Group Composed of Sixty Members; Twenty or Thirty
Make Each Trip.

The University glee club, under the direction of Harold S. Dyer, will give a concert in Burlington under the auspices of the Burlington music club, Friday, October 28.

There is an improved quality in the potentialities of the candidates for the glee club this year and, under the system being used at present, the sixty men who are now in training are rated, groups of twenty or thirty men being selected for concerts on the basis of this standing. This plan gives an opportunity to a greater number of men than it would be possible to use if the club were composed of a definite, limited number.

All Men May Get Awards

The constitution of the organization, which formerly made only those men eligible for awards who had participated in a stipulated number of concert trips, has been changed. Awards are now made on the basis of satisfactory participation, as members, over a period of five quarters, though not necessarily consecutive quarters. To be classed as a member, a candidate must attend seventy per cent of the regular, called rehearsals.

New Officers Elected

The officers of the club are: Wofford Humphreys, president; Harry Lee Knox, vice-president; Lonnie Bain Mann, Jr., secretary; R. J. Somers, librarian; and Claude M. Sawyer, business manager.

Prospective concerts are being planned for Greensboro, Winston-Salem, Statesville, Salisbury, Charlotte, and several other cities in the southern part of the state.
