DR. W. F. PROUTY WELL KNOWN AS GEOLOGY TEACHER

New Head of Geology Department Is Considered One of America's Authorities on Marble.

Dr. W. F. Prouty recently made acting head of the department of geology has a distinguished record as teacher and practical geologist. His chief interest is in teaching and for this reason he has resisted repeated offers to go into specialized branches of commercial geology. Before coming to Chapel Hill, Dr. Prouty was head of the department of geology at the University of Alabama and at the same time was chief assistant on the Alabama Geological Survey. Under his guidance the department developed from one having a few beginning courses to one including a number of advanced courses.

Most notable among Dr. Prouty's contributions to the development of Alabama during his residence at the University are: "Geological Map of the Coosa Coal Field," "Map and Geological Report on the Marble of Alabama," "Report and Geological Map of the Graphite Areas," the first official report of the presence of workable iron ore beds beneath the Shades Valley (Birmingham area) directly contributing to the great industrial development of that section, "Map and Bulletin on Good Roads and Road Materials of Alabama," and report to the War Department on the geology of the site for Wilson Dam at Muscle Shoals.

In addition to his duties as a teacher Dr. Prouty has found time to publish forty bulletins, reports and scientific papers. Recent information received in Chapel Hill reveals the fact that Dr. Prouty is considered by the commercial world one of America's leading authorities on marble and marble quarrying.

Roland Hayes Left Rustic Life Of Obscurity For International Fame

Negro Tenor Who Will Appear in Concert at Durham This Afternoon Went to Europe Early in His Career to Seek Fame Which Was at First Denied Him in This Country.

Like so many others of his race who have received world renown as artists, Roland Hayes, negro tenor, rose from complete obscurity. This singer, who is to give a concert in Durham this afternoon, was not many years ago a mere Georgia "nigger," just another pickaninny from a large family born of a widowed mother, who was reared as a slave.

After a desperate struggle for existence on a tiny Georgia farm, Hayes went to Fisk University as a self-help student. It was here that his singing attracted attention and won him a place with the Fisk Jubilee Singers. In Boston he was singled out by a noted instructor of music and given the advantage of a complete vocal training. He launched his personal career with a few recitals, the small proceeds of which were soon swallowed by his overhead.

Famed in Europe

Unsuccessful in Boston, he was urged by friends to try Europe. Although virtually destitute when he reached London, his genius soon received appreciation. As has happened to many other American artists, Hayes enjoyed continental fame before the praise of his native land.

His European experiences were comparable to a triumphal procession. He appeared in Buckingham palace before the crowned heads of England. Parisian critics recognized the delicate perception of his singing style, while Vienna and Berlin elevated him to the heights reserved for their own Teutonic favorites. His remarkable interpretation and the poignant appeal of the negro spirituals were a superb novelty never before experienced by Europeans.

Received American Offers

His meteoric rise in Europe brought a flood of offers to return to this country. When Hayes finally did come back, he was heralded as one of the outstanding artists of his race. In addition to comparisons to Countee Cullen, Jules Bledsoe, and Langston Hughes, cultural leaders of the negroes, he was accorded a fitting place in the lists of all American vocalists.

Since his return he has sung in practically every city of size in this country. Frequently he has appeared with leading symphony orchestras as guest soloist.

Appeal of Artist

The appeal of this young man is difficult to analyze, but it unmistakably is related to a deep sympathy with the suffering of all humans. His own story of the origin of his desire to sing is typical of his attitude toward art. Upon hearing phonograph records of Caruso and Eames, he declared, "It was as if a bell rang in my heart." From that moment on, his course was a clear one.

Monde Musical, Parisian music journal, has summarized his effect as satisfactory as any with the statement, "One feels that Roland Hayes is here without equal and that to hear his negro spirituals is a sort of blessing from Heaven."

Dr. Cobb To Record Observations Of Forty-Five Years Of Teaching

University Professor Who Headed Geology Department for Forty Years Says He Has Taught Enough and Now Plans to Devote Major Attention to Writing Results.

By Robert W. Madry

"When a man has taught some forty-five years, that is enough. If he can afford to do so, he ought to quit the classroom and set down in writing the results of his work."

The words are those of Dr. Collier Cobb, celebrated geologist and teacher of three generations of University students, who with this explanation served notice this week on the trustees of the University of North Carolina that he desired to retire from administrative duties and devote most of his time to writing.

Although already the author of several well known books and of other numerous scientific papers that have appeared in magazines and elsewhere, from now on, Dr. Cobb, if he keeps the promise made himself, will do but little teaching. But the world may expect to hear from him often, for, after being prodded for many years by his friends and colleagues, he has finally agreed to devote major attention to the results of his work and observations during these last forty-five years. He has even promised to do a book of memoirs, which likely will be the most interesting contribution of all.

Offers to Help University

"I have reached the age of seventy still mentally and physically in good condition," he told President Frank Graham the other day in announcing his decision. "I shall be glad to serve the geology department and the University through the rest of my days, I hope, by giving up some of my duties now, to do writing that I have long had in mind, and preserve my vigor to a happy old age."

Those who have known him here in Chapel Hill through the years realize that Dr. Cobb was not overstating the case when he spoke of being "seventy and still mentally and physically in good condition."

He doubtless could go on teaching for a number of years, for he apparently is as alert and as sound in mind and body as when he celebrated his sixtieth birthday ten years ago. One explanation is that Collier Cobb has obeyed the laws of good health. When his rotund figure has become a bit too plump, his blood pressure a bit too high, he has consulted his doctor and taken measures to remedy the trouble. He eats and sleeps regularly and neither smokes nor drinks. His has always been a temperate life.

In resigning his position as head of the department of geology, which he has built up from practically nothing to one of the best in the country during the

The issuing of a monthly journal to members of the federation and the high schools in the state was discussed but nothing definite was decided upon.

Those attending the meeting were: Haywood Weeks, Carolina, president; William Smith, Catawba, vice-president; Eloise Cobb, W. C. U. N. C., secretary; Mary Siewers, Salem, treasurer; Carlton Anderson, State; Jerome Clark, Davidson; Wendell Horne, Duke; and Sarah Stevens, Asheville Normal. ## GENERAL ALUMNI MEETING CALLED FOR NEXT MONTH

Group Which Initiated Loan Fund Drive Faced by Different Situation This Year.

The Alumni office of the University has been busily engaged during the past week in sending invitations to officers of local alumni clubs, organized alumni classes and prominent alumni to attend the meeting in Chapel Hill, December 9, of the annual General Alumni Assembly.

The program of the annual assembly and business meeting of the General Assembly Association is to be concentrated this year into one evening. K. P. Lewis, president of the General Alumni Association, will preside over the meeting.

Loan Fund Drive Started

It was the same meeting last January that initiated among the alumni the Emergency Student Loan Fund appeal. Following the meeting here, which brought together some 150 alumni from more than twenty-five cities, thirty alumni clubs throughout North Carolina and other states held meetings and were addressed by President Graham, thus giving him a platform for broadcasting the University's appeal: "Save the students."

According to local opinion a different situation confronts the University this year. It is felt that a legislative year serves to challenge the faith of the stand in the University and the aim of the alumni officers is slated to take the form of making the coming assembly a genuine and real expression of the continued faith and loyalty of the alumni.
