DAILY CONTINUES STRAW VOTE ON VICE-PRESIDENT

Balloting for Student Successor To President Graham Continues Through Week.

With a fair sized vote cast yesterday, the DAILY TAR HEEL straw vote on student choice for a successor to President Frank P. Graham to head the University here will enter its second day this morning.

The object of the ballot is to allow University students, both graduate and undergraduate, the opportunity to express their views on the choice of a vice-president of the Greater University of North Carolina. This man will have charge of the University.

Balloting in the vote will continue until Saturday night when the votes will be counted and the results are to be released Sunday.

The ballots are printed in the DAILY TAR HEEL and the polls have been placed in the lobby of the Y. M. C. A. building and in the lobby of Graham Memorial. All students in the University are requested to cast their ballots and express their true convictions as to who should direct the affairs of the University.

This convention will be composed mainly of the chairmen and counsellors of each branch.

The major purpose of the convention is to exchange ideas and to acquaint the delegates of all that is taking place in the progress of electricity.

Papers are presented by students for which prizes are awarded to the best. No papers will be presented by the delegates from Carolina because of lack of time since receiving notice of the convention meeting. Professor W. J. Miller of the electrical department will also attend the convention.

DEBATE SOCIETY VOTES AGAINST BILLS DISCUSSED

Bills Favoring Credit for Athletic Attainment and Discard of Monroe Doctrine Defeated.

Little response was given the introduction of bills on the calendar of the Phi assembly at the meeting in New East building Tuesday night, and the meeting presided over by Speaker Dan Kelly adjourned prior to the regular time for adjournment.

The only speaker to discuss the proposal that students of the University of North Carolina be given credit toward graduation for athletic attainment, Representative Rubin, opposed the measure. An overwhelming majority voted against the bill. The following bill was defeated. Resolved: That the constitution of the United States be so amended as to provide that the citizens of the District of Columbia and all territories of the United States, incorporated in the United States, be allowed a prescribed number of Presidential and Vice-Presidential electors.

A bill favoring the discard of the Monroe Doctrine by the United States provoked a great deal of discussion. The major argument for the discard projected by supporters of the measure was that the Doctrine is used as a screen to foster the economic interests of this country in the various countries affected by the policy.

The meeting next week will be a business session, at which time officers for the coming quarter will be elected.

"Y" CANVASSES STUDENT BODY FOR RELIEF FUNDS

An "every-student canvass" will be conducted Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday of next week by the three Y. M. C. A. cabinets, according to an announcement made yesterday by Bill McKee, president of the Y. Since students are not contributing in their home towns, local relief officials feel that they will be glad to support the Orange county campaign. George Lawrence, county welfare officer, will see to the distribution of the college donations.

Entertainment Postponed

The regular Thursday evening entertainment program sponsored by the Union Forum for this week has been postponed until next Thursday night, it was announced yesterday.

U. N. C. Campus Has Few Monuments To Eminent Alumni And Officials

Monuments Have Been Erected to Joseph Caldwell, First President of the University, Mrs. E. K. Graham, and Confederate Soldiers; None to President Polk.

Among even the few monuments on the campus, there is none to the sole alumnus who rose to the highest position in the nation. Nothing more than a tablet in Memorial hall has been the University's commemoration of James Knox Polk, eleventh president of the United States, and a member of the class of 1818.

Aside from personal memorial gifts such as Kenan stadium, Carr building, and the Morehead-Patterson campanile, the grounds of the University are conspicuously lacking in monuments. There is little question that an absence of sufficient funds has thwarted more than one plan to erect shafts or tablets in honor of the great dead of the University.

Caldwell Monument

The history of the Caldwell shaft is indicative of the struggle necessary to securing the means for presenting memorials to the University. Eleven years were required to raise the money to erect this monument to Joseph Caldwell, D.D., the first president of the University.

Ironically enough it was Polk who instigated the movement among the alumni of the University to raise a memorial to Caldwell. While he was still chief executive of the country, in 1847, he sponsored the resolution that the graduates make the monument possible by contributing three dollars each. It was decided to place the new shaft at some central spot on the campus to supplant the old sandstone column which had been placed in a bad location by the erection of New West building.

Dedicated in 1858

According to Battle's history of the University, $210 was the sum amassed after the first canvass. Since this sum was insufficient, the individual contributions were increased and in 1858 the committee appointed for this purpose announced the dedication of the monument.

When the Caldwell monument was dedicated it was a shining white marble obelisk, more than twenty feet in height, situated near Davie Poplar. At that time it was virtually in the center of the campus and attracted considerable attention.

Today, however, it is weather-beaten, cracked, overgrown, with

Opportune Gift Of Land Figured In Choice Of University Location

Haywood, Chatham County, Was Favorite in Popular Opinion for University Site, But Donations of Land Intervened To Place Institution Here.

Chapel Hill, which is not the name by which the town was known in the days when the University was being founded, came precariously near not being the site of the heart of the state educational system. A donation of a few acres of land seems all that prevented the state legislature's committee of six state senators from placing the University in the now non-existent village of Haywood in Chatham county.

Public opinion on the question of the location of the University was heartily in favor of Haywood. In fact, the situation indicated that almost any place but Chapel Hill would be selected, for the legislature seriously considered Raleigh, Williamsboro, and Goshen in Granville county, Smithfield in the east, Pittsboro, and Hillsboro.

Committee Undecided

The controversy over whether Carolina should be at Haywood or Chapel Hill grew out of the fact that the legislature selected Cyprett's Bridge which crosses New Hope creek in Chatham county, adjoining this one. However, the Bridge was not chosen as the location until after a measure had been passed providing that the site might be fifteen miles from the place designated. A committee of six was appointed to select the land.

In November, 140 years ago, the senators set into the woods of Chatham and Orange county to search about in the prescribed radius of fifteen miles. A record of a journal kept by Senator Fred Hargett, chairman of the selection committee, and dating from November 1 to November 9, reveals that the men viewed several possible places and received numerous unimpressive financial proposals from the proprietors. Although pleased with the site at Haywood, the senators were hesitant because of the price of the land.

Speculators Boomed Haywood

A determined effort was under way to bring the University to Haywood. Confident that it would be the location selected, speculators bought land with intentions of selling at high prices to instructors and business people who must follow the students. Had it not been for donations of land on and surrounding Chapel Hill, from people in this vicinity, Carolina boys might today add boat racing to their athletics, since Haywood was located at the confluence of Haw and Deep rivers. Haywood has today taken its place with other vanished "boom-towns" of past years.

The committee was equally impressed with the hill near New

Today Last Day For Annual's Discount

The Publications Union Board announced yesterday that this is the last day on which organizations on the campus may receive benefit of the ten per cent discount on space offered by the Yackety Yack.

This discount was announced by the Publications Board early in the year with a view to benefit those organizations whose finances are low and who find it difficult to meet their various obligations. As the offer is virtually a price reduction to those orders who are able to meet their obligations—it is surprising to note that a large number of organizations have so far failed to take advantage of this discount.

The Annual is particularly anxious that it be brought to the attention of the secretaries of the various organizations that failure to pay today means the forfeiture of a liberal discount.

LECTURE SERIES AND ORCHESTRA HAS APPROBATION

Project of Senator McKee to Bring Lecturers to Chapel Hill Favored By Senate Tuesday Night.

Motions favoring co-operation in bringing a series of educational lectures to Chapel Hill in January and in lending aid to officials in establishing the prestige of the newly-formed North Carolina symphony orchestra were passed by the Di senate Tuesday night.

Senator McKee asked for the co-operation of the body in bringing eight famous lecturers to Chapel Hill for weekly talks beginning January 7. The discussions will be concerning economic problems of the country today. Senator Medford moved that the Di co-operate in selling tickets and favoring the project. The motion passed.

President Rose voiced a plea to help the North Carolina symphony orchestra throughout the state in future concerts. The senate voted in favor of such a plan.

After much discussion, it was voted to run the regular two-page publication in the Yackety Yack this year. Three new members were taken in. They were James Craighill, Arthur Block, and William Singleterry. Senators Medford and Blackwell were re-instated. Initiation of the new men will take place at the next meeting, which will be an executive session at which time officers for the next quarter will be elected.

Oakley spoke at the annual meeting of the state group in the Sir Walter hotel in Raleigh yesterday.
