Dr. E. C. Brooks Arose From Public School Ranks To Present Position

Graduate of Trinity College, Dr. Brooks, Despite Numerous Controversies During Reign, Has Always Sought to Instruct Raleigh Student Body for Service to Humanity.

"It is essential," said Dr. E. C. Brooks on taking over the executive position of State College in 1923, "that our higher institutions should be so broadened that those who enter the vocations shall be conscious of a distinct relationship to human welfare, and preparations for a vocation, either law or engineering, teaching or manufacturing, preaching or farming, should be based on the modern humanities which open up the avenues of understanding to the necessity of basing individual welfare on the social good." Ever since his accession to the leadership of State, Dr. Brooks has endeavored to carry out the ideas set forth in his inaugural address.

From a position of comparative obscurity as principal of the Kinston, N. C., city schools, Eugene Clyde Brooks has risen to a commanding place in national educational circles as head of one of the foremost engineering and agricultural colleges in the country.

Trinity College Graduate
In his ascendancy to his present eminent rank, Brooks, now vice-president of the Raleigh branch of the Greater University of North Carolina, has held many important positions in the state educational world. His career might be said to have begun when he graduated from Trinity College with an A.B. degree in 1894. The first stepping stone, on his way to a top position in his profession, was his selection in 1900 as principal of the Kinston schools, which was soon followed by his choice as superintendent of the Monroe county schools.

GRAHAM SPEAKS IN CHAPEL PERIOD

President Urges Students to Use Time Left Before Finals to Best Advantage.

President Frank P. Graham, speaking yesterday at the last chapel program to be presented this quarter, stressed the fact that very little time remains before final exams and urged that students make the best possible use of this time. The way in which students organize their time and study during the remainder of this quarter, President Graham stated, will in a great measure determine their success or failure during this school year.

Graham advised that all students take advantage of their opportunities here at the University, since parents have made it possible for them to attend the University, often at a great sacrifice. Students should organize each day, he suggested, in order that they may execute their work and also leave time for relaxation.

The difference between men, Graham continued, is their organization of time and opportunities. If a student successfully schedules the few remaining days before exams, he will have achieved a great deal toward future success.

In addition, Graham urged that students do honest work on the final exams.
