SKINNER SPEAKS ON SUPERSTITION IN SEMINAR TALK

Professor Declares That Superstition in Religion Is Not Based on Reality.

Professor Clarence R. Skinner of Tufts College continued the seminar on liberal religion at the Carolina Inn last night with a lecture on the subject: "Superstition, Belief, and Faith." According to Professor Skinner, it is important to clear up certain misunderstandings regarding superstition and belief in order to think most clearly and logically.

Superstition, from the derivative of the word, is that which is left over, or "an irrational acceptance of a statement which has been handed down through the generations." Superstition has never been tested or proved but rather taken for granted on the authority of someone or some group of a previous era. It exists in practically every walk of life and in various groups of individual types of people according to professions.

Superstition in Religion

In religion there is superstition which is not based on reality. According to Professor Skinner, "Belief differs from superstition in that it is based on a rational acceptance of fact or statement." The problem confronting religion is to make belief as rational as possible. After belief has been tested and proved by every possible means, then we can believe in religion and be assured that it is something dependable.

Faith Is Dynamic Power

Faith, the third of the group, is different from both superstition and belief in that it is a dynamic power which urges us to act upon our convictions. In other words it is the putting to test of beliefs in actual life. Faith is connected with every day life in a more concrete manner, in that we all use faith in our own projects, or in business or marriage. The man who acts only after he has accumulated all knowledge concerning a matter will never have a belief of any kind.

It is faith, then, which we should attempt to cultivate in our lives, for it "is the highest function of life." Faith also creates a new and positive outlook on life and helps us to find life itself.

Sessions Conducted Under Auspices of University and N. C. P. A., With Duke Sharing.

Those who believe that education is an eternal process find the North Carolina Press Institute in able support of their view. The meetings which it sponsors are for the purpose of continuing the journalistic education of the newspapermen of the state. When President Graham opens tonight's gathering, it will be the ninth time that the members of the Fourth Estate of North Carolina have gathered here to obtain advice and comment from authorities in their own and allied fields.

The North Carolina Press Institute, since its inception in 1916, has made itself felt throughout the state as a training school for participants in all branches of journalism. Since its first meeting, the University has played host to the gatherings. During the last two years Duke University has joined hands to entertain and instruct the convened newspapermen.

Although no definite information is available, it is generally believed that the late E. K. Graham, president of the University from 1914 to 1918, was the original sponsor of the Press Institute as part of the University extension program. Ever interested in bringing the citizens and activities of the state into closer contact with the University, he was extremely instrumental in founding this organization.

Men Return to School

In reality the journalists do return to school when they attend the Press Institute. Despite their establishment as successful practitioners, they submit themselves to a course of lectures and open forum discussions designed to present to them

Y. M. C. A. GROUPS HEAR TUFTS DEAN

Professor Skinner Stresses Great Need for Individual Philosophy of Life.

The need of an individual philosophy of life, a philosophy that is in keeping with the modern economic, political, and social world, was stressed Monday night by Professor Clarence R. Skinner, dean-elect of the Tufts College school of religion, in an address before the joint cabinets of the Y. M. C. A., in Gerrard hall. Professor Skinner emphasized the fact that changing conditions necessarily effect a change in our ideas and that a sound philosophy based on a liberal interpretation is extremely desirable in the youth of the country.

A short business session was in order immediately following Professor Skinner's talk. A motion was passed providing that the Y. M. C. A. cabinets convey to retiring pastor Reverend Eugene Olive of the Baptist church a message of appreciation for his cooperation with the Y. M. C. A. ventures and a wish for his future success. President Bill McKee asked that any member of the cabinets who had suggestions for future joint cabinet programs would submit them to the respective presidents for consideration.

HENDERSON SELLS SHAW COLLECTION FOR HIGH PRICES

One Letter Brings High Mark Of $2,400; Sale Made on Advice of Shaw.

From the auction sale of his collection of George Bernard Shaw's letters, books, and manuscripts in New York Monday, Dr. Archibald Henderson of the mathematics department, realized a total of $7,887.

The fifty-four-page letter written by Shaw to Dr. Henderson in 1905 brought the top price of $2,400 from Gabriel Wells, professional rare book collector. This letter is virtually an autobiography of the Irish playwright and forms the basis of Henderson's first book about Shaw's life and works.

Bid Starts at $300

A bid of $300 started the sale of the 12,500-word letter, which Shaw spent thirteen days writing, but the bidding rapidly reached $2,400, for which it was sold to Wells.

When the auctioneer was heard to intone "Damn Bernard Shaw and his tedious doings and sayings" and a few non-professionals in the audience failed to realize that he was quoting one of Shaw's own letters, a ripple of laughter interrupted the regularity of the two-hour sale.

Collection of 204 Items

The collection consisted of 204 items and was described by the American Art Association-Anderson Galleries, where the sale was conducted, as the largest in America. These items sold from $3 to $950, the second highest price.

Shaw did not meet his biographer until the first volume was half completed. When he heard of Dr. Henderson's activities, he wrote to him and requested a photograph, which was sent. Shaw's reply was:

"You seem to be the man for the job."

Henderson Visits Shaw

Later Shaw wrote Dr. Henderson and suggested that he come to England, as "it is not desirable that the only American now living who has not called on me should be my biographer."

Dr. Henderson said that he decided to take Shaw's advice to dispose of his collection now because of the present "high interest" in Shaw's work.

Budget Would Cut Actual Receipts From State $110,140 For Next Two Years.

GRAHAM'S REQUEST PARED

Heavy Cuts Are Recommended By Commission for All State-Supported Institutions.

A curtailment in the state appropriations for the University of North Carolina amounting to $330,430 has been suggested by the budget commission as presented by Governor J. C. B. Ehringhaus in his budget message read Monday night to each house of the General Assembly. The University's annual appropriations for the coming biennium beginning June 30, 1933, and ending June 30, 1935 will be $390,570, according to the suggested figures.

Allotments Made

Of the $721,000 appropriated by the state for the fiscal year, June 30, 1931, to June 30, 1932, only $525,387 or approximately seventy per cent, was actually received by the University, according to figures released by the University business office. The amount allotted the University for the year 1932-33, the present fiscal period, is $500,710. In other words, if the recommended budget is adopted, the University will be forced to operate through the coming fiscal year 1933-34 on an amount reduced $110,140 from the amount actually used during the present year.

These reductions followed the general scale of appropriations recommended for state supported schools by the budget commission. In his budget request last month President Graham asked for $691,924 as the state appropriation necessary for the maintenance of the University.

According to the report of the budget commission submitted to
